

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Vol. 6-1933

★ HOSP. BK. & NEWS. SOC.

(Reid) AB

MEMOIRS
OF THE LIVES AND WRITINGS OF THOSE Eminent Divines, WHO CONVENED IN THE FAMOUS ASSEMBLY AT WESTMINSTER, IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

BY JAMES REID,
MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL.

"The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance," PSALM cxli. 6.

VOL. II.

PAISLEY:

PRINTED BY STEPHEN AND ANDREW YOUNG, High Street.

1815.

g.c.H.

283214

NOV 1964
JAN
1965

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND VOLUME.

MEMOIRS of men of distinguished eminence are both instructive and interesting. In those books, we may see the goodness of Divine Providence, in raising and furnishing proper instruments for every work. In the Memoirs of the brilliant constellation at Westminster, we may see, in particular, sound principles, Christian dispositions, and a conversation becoming the gospel of Christ. In these, we may clearly see the power of divine grace shining forth in all its glory, in real life, subduing the inbred corruptions of our fallen nature, and animating to every good word and work. In these, we may see pious and learned men eminently zealous in the advancement of true religion, and earnestly contending for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. In these volumes, we may see the reproaches and persecutions which the faithful servants of Jesus Christ have endured for righteousness' sake; those gracious and heavenly principles which supported them in all their tribulations, and the course which they uniformly followed in their way to the better world.

We are very much indebted to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, as we are to our illustrious Reformers in general, both in early and later times, for our civil and religious liberty. They were zealous advocates for all that liberty wherewith Christ has made his people free. And their labours were not in vain. We enjoy the fruits of these labours. And to rescue from oblivion genuine and impartial accounts of those eminent divines, is a tribute which we owe to their memory.

The very interesting history of their diligent researches both in literature and in divinity, and of their unwearyed labours in the cause of their God and their country; well deserves to be faithfully transmitted to the latest posterity. And, true accounts of their avowed and warm attachment to the cause of Christ, of their painful sufferings in that cause, and of their triumphant deaths, are justly entitled to all our attention and esteem.

The author of these Memoirs has spared neither labour nor expense in the collection of materials, and has carefully preserved whatever appeared interesting, entertaining, and useful. When the excellencies of those divines have been exhibited, neither their infirmities, nor the accusations of their adversaries, have been suppressed. Impartiality has been studied.—There is always reference to the authorities; but sometimes only at the end of the life.—Attention has been given to the true orthography of the names both of persons and of places.

After all efforts to obtain information, the account of several lives is very defective, to the great loss of the inquisitive reader. This defect was unavoidable at the distance of time, and in my circumstances. After the utmost research, for some years, no more information could be procured. The work will be found very defective in its execution, as well as through want of information; and it requires much indulgence from the reader. The author has done what he could, and availed himself of every advantage within his reach, to make the whole work as full and useful as possible. And, having given a larger account of it, in the preface to the first volume, he now concludes with wishing, that both the reader and himself may be taught to imbibe the principles and spirit of those divines, to follow them as far as they followed Christ, in adhering firmly to the cause of true religion, and in propagating it with the same holy zeal.

MEMOIRS, &c.

HENRY HALL, B. D. OF NORWICH,

AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HENRY HALL is marked in Mr Neal's list of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, as giving constant attendance. He was appointed one of the select Committee for the examination and approbation of those ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. He appears to have been a divine of considerable eminence; for he was employed by the Assembly in work of very great utility and importance. Mr Robert Baillie, one of the learned Commissioners from the Church of Scotland, to the Assembly at Westminster, reckons Mr Hall among the ablest divines in that venerable Assembly, where he is speaking of him being against the institution of ruling elders by divine right.^a

One Henry Hall, B. D. some time Fellow of Trinity-college, in Cambridge, has published a Sermon, which is entitled, Heaven Ravished; or, A Glorious Prize, achieved by an Heroical Enterprise. Probably, he was the same person, who sat in the Assembly at Westminster; but I am not able to say, certainly. That Sermon was preached from Mat. xi. 12. to the Honourable House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, May 29, 1644. 4to. pp. 71.—In it he says, "A Christian is never so glorious, as when he suffers most reproach and ignominy for Christ's sake." Speaking of zeal in religion and reformation, according to knowledge, he says, "Let us all labour to blow up, and to keep alive this sacred fire, upon the altar of our hearts, that it may inflame our devotion toward God, kindle our love toward men, and burn out all our own corruptions. Let it never cool with age, nor abate with opposition, nor be quenched with any floods of persecution." It is a good Sermon.

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 401.

HUMPHREY HARDWICK,

MINISTER OF THE WORD AT HADAM MAGNA, IN THE COUNTY OF HARTFORD, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HUMPHREY HARDWICK was one of the super-added divines, in the Assembly. He is represented by Neal as attending constantly during the Session. He seems to have been a considerable sufferer under the oppressions of the persecuting prelates, and by the civil war. In his Sermon before the House of Commons, from Psalm cxxvi. 5, 6. he speaks of himself as among the silenced ministers. And in his epistle dedicatory to the House of Commons, which is prefixed to that sermon, he says,—“No man, I suppose, hath more cause to be large in apology than I, having long since had my poor library totally plundered, and myself not able, until this day, to buy one book of considerable value. Besides from the beginning of this war, until the last month, being conversant among arms, where studies are interrupted. But those things I account part of my chief happiness on earth, to have suffered much, and done a little good in the cause of Christ, and service of the state.” He was very zealous in the noble cause of the Reformation. He says, in the Sermon above-mentioned, “Search through the holy Book, and tell me whether any men are so precious in the eyes of Heaven, and the account of God himself, as those who have been zealous for the reformation of his Church, the carrying on of his cause, the help of his people against their wicked and profane opposers. How highly were Caleb and Joshua esteemed of God for being courageous, when others flagged in the business, and shrunk at evil tidings?" Mr Hardwick was a great advocate for the National Covenant.—I have seen only one sermon of his, which is entitled, "The Difficulty of Zion's Deliverance and Reformation; together with the Activity which her friends should manifest, during the time that her cause is in agitation." It was delivered at Margaret's, Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, on Wednesday morning, the 26th day of June, 1644. 4to. pp. 36. London, 1644. A valuable Sermon.

ROBERT HARRIS, D. D.

PASTOR OF HANWELL, A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER, AND PRESIDENT OF TRINITY-COLLEGE IN OXFORD.

ROBERT HARRIS was born at Broad Campden in Gloucestershire, in England, in the year 1578. His father had the character of a very prudent and intelligent man; and his mother was allowed to be a very religious and charitable woman. Under the tuition of these parents he passed his childhood. He discovered, in this early period of his life, a strong propensity to his play. He acknowledged with compunction, that he greatly preferred his sport to reading the Holy Scriptures at the call of his affectionate parents. This natural averseness to read the Sacred Writings was matter of much grief to him, during his whole life. I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me. The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. This all mankind must feel whether they acknowledge it or not. The subject of this memoir was made to possess the iniquities of his youth. Surely after that I was turned I repented; and after that I was instructed I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth. He found always, while he was a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth, sufficient reason for that appropriate prayer, Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember thou me, for thy goodness sake, O Lord, Psalm xxv. 7. His youthful folly, and disobedience to parental authority and the law of the Lord, made a deep and permanent impression upon his tender mind, and occasioned much serious exercise of soul. But, according to the proverb, "An untoward boy may make a good man." This was indeed fully verified, in the notable example which is now before us.—His parents, having designed him either for the Law-business, or for the holy ministry, according as his parts and inclination might lead, sent him in due time, to receive his early education at the free-school of Chipping-Campden, in his native county. Here he was very far from being comfortable in his school-masters. They were often changed upon him, through want of salary; and some of them beat their scholars in a brutal and savage manner, without mercy. Such a mode of correction is certainly a disgrace to civilized life. It made very fearful and lasting impressions upon the mind of our young scholar. Though for his own part, he never felt as far as he remembered, the smart of the rod in any school, yet the daily executions upon others, brought such a trembling and sadness on his spirit, that he could not be entirely delivered from so long as he lived. He often said, that such treatment was the bane (ruin) of many school-boys. The inhabitants of Gloucestershire were in a very rude state, at that time; which should be here observed. He was removed from Chipping-Campden to the school at Worcester, where he was placed under the tuition of Mr Bright, and on the Sabbath day he was a hearer of that learned pastor, Dr Robert Abbots. When accomplished in school-education, he removed to Magdalen-college, Oxford, in the latter end of the year 1595. There he shewed an uncommon thirst for knowledge; and very soon began to seek and taste the sweetness of all useful learning. He became an excellent scholar, and a famous logician and disputant. And he was called by his tutor, Mr Goffe, or Gough, to concur with his other pupils in reading the Bible, in prayer, and in the repetition of sermons.* Not being accustomed to this yoke of our Lord Jesus Christ, he found it at first somewhat galling. He observed, that he knew few, if any, of the serious, who followed that practice, and yet he was not able to confute it. In this case, he very properly applied unto the Father of Lights for direction. Prayer is the natural language of the soul, imploring, in its distress, Divine direction and help. It was, accordingly, an exercise most exactly suited to the condition of our young pupil, who now required light to direct him in the way in which he should go. He humbled himself before the Lord in prayer. He fell down in his study, and entreated that the infinitely wise God would either discover the falsehood, if his tutor had any design upon him to seduce him; or, if this way were pleasing to God, that then He would confirm him in it. He was very soon fully resolved to comply with the wholesome measures of his pious tutor. He bought a Bible, read and studied it, with indefatigable diligence and care, along with some good authors in divinity. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths. He also made great advances in philosophy, and in the Greek and Hebrew languages. He was singularly happy in his tutor. And when Mr Goffe ceased to be his tutor, they agreed to continue their studies and reading together, for their mutual benefit. In the Hebrew, they had also the concurrence of some other of the fellows, who joined them, one of whom was afterward president. And though Mr Harris was not then complete bachelor in the hall, yet he was readily accepted by the company, being found to be a very diligent student, and equally expert in his grammar, as his companions were. Beside these useful studies, his tutor and he mutually agreed to read the celebrated Calvin's Institutions by turns. These Institutions appear to have been much read at that time by students, in England. Dr Saunderson, bishop of Lincoln, says; "When I began to set myself to the study of divinity as my proper business, Calvin's Institutions were recommended to me, as they were generally to all young scholars in those times, as the best and perfectest system of divinity, and the fittest to be laid as a ground-work in the study of that profession. And indeed my expectation was not at all deceived, in the reading of those Institutions." —

* See Wood's Ath. Oxon. vol. ii. p. 261. 2d edition.

Mr Harris, having taken one degree in arts. and continued some time bachelor of arts, turned his attention more particularly to the work of the holy ministry. By the Divine blessing upon his studies, and the pious instructions of his excellent tutor, he was brought to a saving knowledge of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God, and soon after became a very eminent Puritan. He generously offered his service in preaching the Gospel, at Chipping-Campden, in his native county. But such is said to have been the ignorance of the times, and the state of religious affairs in that place, that when he came to the church there was no Bible to be found, from which he might read his text. Even in the greater town, he did not know where one could be procured. At length, he was directed to the house of the vicar of the parish, who had a Bible in his possession; but, as it had not been seen for some months, it could scarcely be found. Having, however, at last obtained the sacred volume, he went to the church and preached an admirable sermon from Rom. x. 1. Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved: This sermon met with much applause; but the preacher often said, that he lost by the bargain. He found himself in danger of being exalted above measure, through the abundance of his success and popular applause, which was against the prosperity of his soul. Beside, his friends solicited him to cease now from pursuing any longer his studies in the University, and come among them, declaring that he already had a sufficiency of human literature. His father also, having yet many other children to provide for, wished to have him settled in some place in the church. But he then declined public employment in the church, and importuned his father to allow him what more patrimony he was pleased to give him, for the farther prosecution of his studies at Oxford. With much difficulty, he obtained his request, and, with great joy, he returned to the University. But very soon after his return, a dreadful plague invaded that famous seat of learning. The students were dispersed, and he was in great perplexity. He was averse to return home, and where to go he knew not. But according to the Jewish proverb, "When the bricks are doubled, then comes Moses." He was, in the extremity of his distress, mercifully relieved, by Divine Providence. One Mr Doyly, who lived not far from Oxford, a gentleman of a very ancient family, and very friendly to the Gospel of Christ, invited Mr Harris to his house. Mrs Doyly was eminently pious and intelligent, and he was peculiarly comfortable in that family. He there met with one Mr Prier, a pious minister, who was then in a very weakly state, and overburdened with preaching, both on the Lord's-day, and at extraordinary Fasts, which were appointed on account of the prevalence of the plague. Mr Harris preached sometimes, through compassion, for Mr Prier, with much approbation. His labours being highly acceptable and useful, he was solicited to continue there for some time, which he did, until the Lord appeared in another call to him.

^a See Toplady's Hist. Proof, vol. ii. sect. 20.

The venerable and justly celebrated divine, Mr John Dod, being silenced for non-conformity, and ejected from Hanwell in Oxfordshire, by Dr Bridges, bishop of Oxford, Sir Anthony Cope invited Mr Harris to become his successor. He complied with the invitation, and, accordingly, he removed to Hanwell, though with very much grief and fear. Mr Dod, whose labours at Hanwell were very numerous, and most extensively useful, being driven from his truly affectionate and beloved people, they would acknowledge no man as their pastor except him who had been ejected from Hanwell. It was, however, agreed upon that Mr Harris should preach so long as there was any hope of recovering Mr Dod, their former faithful pastor. During this very unsettled state at Hanwell, archbishop Bancroft presented the place to one of his chaplains, upon pretence of a lapse. But Sir Anthony Cope, who was then sitting in parliament, together with some other members of the house, waited upon the archbishop, and presented Mr Harris, whom his grace, after a long contest, with very great reluctance, admitted. Sir Anthony having formerly spoken in that parliament against insufficient ministers, not without some reflection upon the insufferable proceedings of the archbishops and bishops, Bancroft very readily embraced this opportunity of shewing his resentment; and, therefore, he referred Mr Harris to be very strictly examined by his most learned chaplain. The chaplain, after sufficient examination, returned Mr Harris moderately learned. This return proving unsatisfactory to the archbishop, Mr Harris was afterward committed to the examination of bishop Burlow, a man who was most exactly suited to Bancroft's wishes. The bishop was a person of great wit and learning, and exceedingly glad of the opportunity. He examined Mr Harris first in divinity, then in other branches of learning, especially in the Greek language, in which his lordship was allowed to be a celebrated critic. As the story is related, "They Greeked it until they were both run a-ground for want of words, upon which they burst into a fit of laughter, and so gave it over." Burlow returned to the archbishop, and, delivering a most favourable testimony, his grace, it is said, was satisfied. But Mr Harris expressed his fear to become the successor of so eminent a divine as Mr Dod, which was not very pleasing to the archbishop, though at that time he courted Mr Dod.

Mr Harris being now settled as pastor at Hanwell, Mr Seudder at Drayton, and Mr Whately at Banbury, they soon became very intimate, and were united in judgment, in brotherly affection, and also by affinity. Mr Harris married Mr Whately's sister, and Mr Seudder his wife's sister. These divines commonly met together once a-week, to translate and analyse a chapter of the Bible. This laudable practice had a strong tendency to promote brotherly love, their mutual edification, and to excite them to greater diligence in their studies. They continued the practice as long as their employments and circumstances admitted.

Though Mr Harris was comfortably settled, he was called by Divine Providence to endure many trials. Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. His faith and patience were much exercised by his wife's long and painful illness, upon the birth of her first child. Mr Dod told him, That this affliction was designed to season him, and fit him for his arduous work. And Mr Harris himself often said, "That he should have been quite spoiled, had he not been thus taken down. Young ministers know not on what ground they tread, till God make them humble."—Now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations: That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Mr Dod was accustomed to say, "Sanctified afflictions are spiritual promotions." Mr Harris had the experience of the truth of this judicious saying. After some other troubles, he found much encouragement in his labour in the Lord's vineyard. His people now began to relish his ministry, and the Lord, who alone gives the increase, greatly blessed the works of his hands. He did not feed the flock, over which the Holy Ghost had made him an overseer, with airy notions, and dry speculations, but with genuine knowledge, the sincere milk of the word, that they might thereby grow. His discourses, in general, were adapted to persons of the meanest capacity. His people received least benefit from what cost him most labour, his sermons upon the whole epistle to the Colossians. This has often been verified. When he preached these sermons, he thought that he could not speak in too high a style to a people who were so well instructed, but at last he found that he was mistaken. Some of his hearers afterward told him, that his labour upon that epistle was lost to them. A lesson to all ministers of the Gospel. He greatly excelled in handling and illustrating historical passages of the Sacred Writings. He dispensed to his hearers the substantial provision of his degree of Doctor of divinity, was made president of Trinity-college, and became rector of Garlington, near Oxford. He governed his college with much prudence, gaining the affections of all the fellows and students, who revered him as a father. He was ten years president of that college. He preached on the Lord's day at his parsonage, once a week in the city of Oxford, and constantly in his turn at the University, both in English and in Latin.

Dr Walker and other royalists have stigmatized him as a notorious pluralist. The Doctor rests the evidence of this slanderous accusation upon the authority of a very scurrilous and abusive letter, which was published in those troublesome times, with a view to expose and pour all manner of contempt upon the Puritans. He also observes, "that he had somewhere read, that in those times, Dr Harris's picture was drawn with one steeple upon his head, and with others coming out of his pockets." "Pluralities should not be justified. They are certainly indefensible. Respecting this charge, Dr Harris himself made the following generous and open declaration. He says, "That though he stood clear in his own conscience, and in the consciences of those persons who best knew him, that he was far from allowing non-residence and a plurality of livings; yet, to such persons as were ignorant of all circumstances, there was some appearance of evil. And that it would, and should be to him, matter of humiliation and of caution while he lived, that he had given the least advantage to the adversary. He undoubtedly possessed several benefices; but whether he received the profits of them all, and enjoyed them all at the same time, appears very doubtful. Though Dr Grey denominates him "a fanatical hero, and a professed enemy to the constitution, both in church and state," yet he partly acquits him of that vile charge, and invalidates, in a great degree, the authority of the above scurrilous letter, upon which it rested.

Wood, the famous Oxford historian, brings accusations against Dr Harris, which, if true, would prove him to have been one of the very basest of men. He charges him with having taken for his own use two bags of gold, containing one hundred pounds each, which he found among some old rubbish in Trinity-college, soon after he became president. He also affirms, that Dr Harris told most glaring falsehoods, with a view to secure the money to himself.^a One very judiciously observes here; "Though our documents will not afford us materials for a complete refutation of these charges; yet the whole of what is asserted, and especially the worst part of it, is so contrary to the uniform spirit and deportment of this learned and pious divine, that the account appears extremely suspicious, and only designed to reproach the memory of the Puritans."^b Many attempts, in those times, were made to reproach the memory of the Puritans. They were, like the apostles and followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, in former times, accounted as the off-scouring of all things.

Dr Harris was eminently distinguished by his prudent government of himself and of his family, as well as of his college and of his flock. His government of himself was very remarkable. He who has no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls. But the prudent subject of this memoir had much rule over his own spirit, and was like the standing city, having strong walls. He was most exactly temperate in the use of all things, confining himself strictly to hours for food, sleep, labour, and recreation. He ate sparingly and seasonably, which had a strong tendency to preserve in him much vigour, even to a great age. His principal time for recreation was the afternoon of Saturday, when he would unbend his mind, and allow himself some harmless recreation, in order that he might be more vigorous for the important and deeply interesting work of the Lord's-day.—He was very seldom seen angry; but, if at any time, his mind was discomposed by the improper conduct of other persons, he had such a remarkable command of himself, that he could very quickly turn his passion into wholesome instruction. In his censures of others, he was very sparing, gentle to all, and severe only to himself. He had a very peculiar gift of forgetting injuries, without offering any. He was very mindful of favours. And, in the government of his family, he was not less remarkable. He ruled well his own house. He carefully maintained his authority over his children, which was equally tempered with lenity and gravity. He loved them without shewing fondness, and he ruled them without rigour. As soon as they could speak, they were taught to repeat some historical passages of the Holy Scriptures. As soon as they could walk, they were sent to school. When they were able to recollect any part of a chapter, which had been read, or commit to memory, and bring home any passage of a sermon which they had heard, he began to instruct them in the first principles of religion. When they were farther advanced, he enjoined upon them the practice of religion, and he diligently observed their private performance of religious exercises. He was very attentive unto them every way, carefully observing their capacities, inclinations, and constitutional sins. And he used all caution and means, that they might be enabled, through divine grace, to avoid those sins. His laudable endeavours were crowned, by the blessing of God, with success equal to his largest wishes. He was an example of strict and serious godliness in his family. He was an affectionate and good husband. To his servants he was a kind and gentle master, carefully instructing them and exhorting them unto their duty; and some of them had much reason to bless the Lord that ever they came under his roof.

^a Wood's Fasti Oxon. vol. ii. p. 67. 2d edition.

^b Brook's Lives of the Puritans, vol. iii. p. 308.

He found very much sweet delight in God, and in divine things. He accounted those his best days, when he enjoyed most intercourse with Heaven. Upon a person in his sickness asking him how he did, he said, "O, this has been a sweet day, I have had sweet communion with God in Jesus Christ." He had an early sense of religion, though he neither knew the preacher, nor the sermon, by which he was converted. In his self-examination, he marked down in writing his evidences for heaven, some times in propositions from the Holy Scriptures, and at other times in syllogisms. These evidences he often subscribed in a book which he had for the purpose: but they were best read in the course of his life, which was an exact walking with God, in piety, charity, humility, patience, and an entire dependance upon Him.

When he had settled his worldly affairs and his children, and left himself nothing to do but to turn his attention more particularly to preparation for death, the Lord was pleased to visit him with a very sore affliction. His wife, who was eminently religious, having lived about fifty years with him, was now delivered up to such strong temptations of Satan and horrors of mind, as terrified all spectators. On this mournful occasion, he often said, "God made it appear to all beholders, that the best man is no more than God makes him. Grace and comfort are all from Him." He bore this heavy affliction with much meekness and patience, and it served only, under the blessing of God, to throw greater lustre on his graces, and to excite him unto more diligence and fervour in religious exercises. Now, no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them who are exercised thereby.

We come now to the close of this laborious and valuable life, in this world. The following lines were strikingly verified in our celebrated preacher, both in the course of his life, and at his death.

"I preach, as if I ne'er should preach again;
And, as a dying man, to dying men."

Dr Harris, in his last sickness, being desired to admit company, said, "It is all one to me whether I am kept alone, or have my friends with me. My work is now to arm myself for death, which assaults me, and to apply myself unto that great encounter." Accordingly, he spent his time in prayer, meditation, and reading the Holy Scriptures; especially the book of Psalms, the prophecy of Isaiah, and the Gospel by John. He delighted exceedingly in the 10th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th, chapters of that Evangelist. And when he became unable to read himself, he desired his friends to read unto him. He collected the principal things which were contained in the chapter, and expounded what seemed to be difficult in it, feeding most sweetly on this spiritual food. Trouble and anguish have taken hold on me; yet thy commandments are my delights. He warmly exhorted those persons who visited and attended him, to seek above all things to obtain the precious grace of faith. He said to them, "You must put on all the spiritual armour of God, and then go forth in the Lord's strength. Stand in the fight, and the issue shall be glorious: only forget not to call in the help of your General. Do all from him, and under him." He hindered none, on the Lord's-day, from public worship, to attend him; but greatly encouraged them to go unto the house of God. And upon their return, he said, "Come, what have you for me?" meaning that they should repeat to him some part of the sermons which they had heard, to which he carefully attended. And having given a summary of every sermon, he said, "O what excellent truths are these! Lay them up charily, you will have need of them." When his friends came to visit him, being weakly, he said, "I cannot speak, but I can hear." Notwithstanding, upon being asked where his comfort lay, he answered, In Christ, and in the free grace of God. He derived his comfort from the Lord Jesus Christ, and the unsearchable riches of divine grace, reigning through righteousness unto eternal life. When it was observed that he might take much comfort from his labours and usefulness, he replied, "All is nothing without a Saviour. Without Him my best works would condemn me. Oh! I am ashamed of them, being mixed with so much sin. Oh! I am an unprofitable servant. I have not done any thing for God as I ought. Loss of time sits heavy upon my spirit. Work, work apace. Be assured nothing will more trouble you, when you come to die, than that you have done no more for God, who has done so much for you." He farther said, "I never in all my life saw the worth of Christ, nor tasted the sweetness of God's love, in so great a measure as I now do." Here we may observe, That the Lord Jesus Christ is indeed an all-sufficient Saviour, and the only real support of a departing soul. I cannot refrain transcribing in this place the admirable words of the celebrated Mr Davies, president of the college of New Jersey, in America, in a letter to his dear friend and brother, when he was beginning to creep back from the valley of the shadow of death, to which he had made a very near approach, using his own words. Mr Davies, in that letter, says, "In my sickness, I found the unspeakable importance of a Mediator in a religion for sinners. O! I could have given you the word of a dying man for it, that that Jesus whom you preach is indeed a necessary, and an all-sufficient Saviour. Indeed he is the only support for a departing soul. None but Christ, none but Christ. Had I as many good works as Abraham or Paul, I would not have dared to build my hopes upon such a quicksand, but only on this firm eternal rock."

When Dr Harris's friends asked what they should do for him, he replied, "You must not only pray for me, but also praise God for his unspeakable mercy to me; and in particular, that he has kept Satan from me, in my weakness. O, how good is God! Entertain good thoughts of him. However it be with us, we cannot think too well of him, nor too ill of ourselves." The inexpressible goodness of God in Christ seems to have made a very deep and lasting impression upon his religious mind; for in all his wills the following legacy was always renewed; "Also, I bequeath to all my children, and their children's children, to each of them a Bible, with this inscription, None but Christ." He said to his particular friends, "I am now going home, even quite spent. I am now at the shore, but leave you still tossing on the sea. Oh! it is a good time to die in." Nearer the time of his departure, being asked how he did, he said, "In no great pain, I praise God, only weary of my useless life. If God has no more service for me to do here, I could be gladly in heaven, where I shall serve him better, delivered from sin and distractions. I pass from one death to another, yet I fear none. I praise God that I can live, and dare die. If God has more work for me to do here, I am willing to do it, though my infirm body be very weary." Afterward, he said, "I do now no good, I hinder other persons who might be better employed, if I were removed. Why should any desire to live, but to do God service? Now I cease from that, I do not live." When both the violence of his trouble and the advice of his physicians prohibited speech, he called upon those persons who attended him, to read the Holy Scriptures unto him, and upon his son to pray frequently with him. In the immediate views of an approaching eternity, he desired that the eighth chapter of the epistle to the Romans should be read unto him. And he professed that he lived and died in that faith which he had preached and printed, and that he now, in the near prospect of death, found the unspeakable comfort of it; desiring that intimation should be made thereof in that country where he had been longest known. Having given strong evidence of the excellence and power of that religion, which can support the precious and immortal soul, and make the, otherwise very gloomy, prospect of death easy and cheerful, he closed his eyes in peace, pleasingly resigning his soul to God, on the 11th of Dec. 1658, aged eighty years.

The following brief account has been given of the excellent endowments of Dr Harris.—He was a very hard student, a man of great abilities, and richly furnished with all learning which is necessary to a divine. He was a pure and elegant Latinist, he had a considerable knowledge of the Greek, and was an exact master of the Hebrew language. He was greatly admired as a subtle, clear, and very ready, disputant. He excelled in chronology, church-history, the councils, case-divinity, and in the knowledge of the fathers. But his parts were best seen in the pulpit. His gifts and graces eminently appeared, in prayer; his affections were warm and elevated; his petitions weighty and substantial; and his language, pertinent, unaffected, and without tautology. He was accounted a judicious divine, and an accomplished preacher. He preached with much learned plainness, beautifully unfolding the grand mysteries of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God unto persons of the meanest capacities. In his younger days, about twenty years together, he wrote his sermons exactly, and committed them to memory, which he could do with much ease. He was very large and particular in the application of his sermons. In prayer and preaching, he had an admirable faculty of engaging the attention, and of warming and raising the affections of his auditory. He was exceedingly charitable to the poor, and eminently distinguished for humility, mortification, and self-denial. In short, he was a person of eminent piety and gravity, and was richly furnished with every necessary qualification to render him a complete scholar, a wise governor, a profitable preacher, and an excellent Christian.

Some of his choice sayings follow. He used to say, "That a preacher has three books to study: the Bible, himself, and the people.—That preaching to the people was but one part of the pastor's duty: he was to live and die in them, as well as for, and with them."—He advised young preachers to pen largely, and to keep their notes for all emergencies. He observed, That the humblest preachers converted the greatest number of souls, not the most choice scholars while unbroken.—That he valued no man for his gifts, but for his humility under them.—Nor did he expect much from any man, 'were his parts ever so great, until he was broken by afflictions and temptations.—That so much humility as any man had, so much grace and worth, and no more.—That it was just with God to deny us the comforts of our graces, when we deny him the glory of them. He used to say, that some duties which were often in men's mouths, were very difficult to him: as, to deny himself, in all the extent of that expression; to live only by faith, and a bare promise without a pawn; to ascribe all to free grace, and to Christ alone; and to love where we meet with the want of love, and contempt.—He said, "That it was a hard thing for a saint to forgive himself some faults, even when God has forgiven these. It is hard to continue long in holy thoughts, and to confine our thoughts to the prayers of another person. We know but little of Christ's love, till all be perfected, and spread before us in heaven." ^a

Dr Harris's last will and testament contains much excellent advice to his wife and to his numerous children, but it is too long for insertion in this place. His writings came forth at different times, in their first appearance to the public eye. "The Way to True Happiness, in twenty-four Sermons upon the Beatitudes," Mat. v. and "A Treatise of the New Covenant," from Ezek. xi. 19, 20. were both printed at London, in quarto, in 1632. But these and his other writings were afterward collected and published in one volume, small folio, London, 1654. The eminently pious bishop Wilkins passes an high encomium upon his English Sermons. And his Latin Sermons to the clergy have been very highly commended. These are said to have gained the approbation of all persons who were skilful in that language. Wood says, that one of his Latin Sermons, from John xxi. 17, 18. with another Latin Sermon of Dr Dan. Featly were printed at Utrecht, in 1657, and both entitled Pedum Pastorale, &c.

CHARLES HERLE, A. M.

PASTOR OF WINWICK, IN LANCASHIRE, A MEMBER AND SOME TIME PROLOCUTOR OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

CHARLES HERLE was born at Prideaux-Herle, near Lystwithyel, or Lostwithiel, in the county of Cornwall, in England, in the year 1598. He was descended from a good family, and born of honourable parents.

^a Clark's Lives, and Durham's Life of Dr Harris.

He was the third son of Ed. Herle, Esq. Wood says, that though his ancestors had lived several generations in that place above-mentioned in genteel fashion, yet they were originally of West Herle in Northumberland. He received his education in Exeter-college, in Oxford, where he entered a student, in the year 1612. He took his degrees in arts, that of master being completed in the year 1618. Having finished his studies at the University, he entered upon the ministerial work. He was first settled at some place in Devonshire, where, being always accounted a Puritan, he suffered persecution on account of his non-conformity. For, All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Afterward, he became rector of Winwick, in Lancashire, which is said to have been one of the richest livings in England. Upon the commencement of the civil war, he took part with the Parliament, was elected one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and, upon the death of Dr Twisse, in the year 1646, he was chosen prolocutor to the Assembly. He took the Covenant, preached frequently before the Parliament, was appointed one of the licensers of the press for books of divinity, in 1643, one of the morning lecturers at the Abbey-church, Westminster, and one of the select committee for the examination and approbation of ministers of the Gospel who petitioned for sequestered livings. And, in the year 1644, he and others, to the number of twenty-one, had full power given them to ordain ministers for a time in the county of Lancaster. Mr Herle was also appointed one of the committee of accommodation, in 1645; and he was one of the committee of learned divines appointed by the Assembly to prepare materials for their Confession of Faith. He subscribed the proposition, "That Jesus Christ, as King of the church has himself appointed a church-government distinct from the civil magistrate." He was accounted a moderate presbyterian. In his imprimatur to the Apology of the Independents, he calls it a Performance full of peaceableness, modesty and candour; and though he wrote against it, yet in the preface to his book, which is entitled, 'The Independency on Scriptures of the Independency of Churches," he says, "The difference between us and our brethren who are for Independency, is nothing so great as you seemed to conceive it;—at most it does but ruffle a little the fringe, not any way rend the garment of Christ; it is so far from being a fundamental, that it is scarcely a material, difference."

—When the Scottish commissioners proposed to leave the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, with a view to return home, Mr Herle, who was then prolocutor to the Assembly, spoke in the name of his brethren, and thanked the honourable and reverend commissioners from the church of Scotland for their seasonable assistance. Upon this occasion, he excused, in the best manner that he could, the Directory's not being so well observed as it ought; and lamented that the Assembly had not power to call offenders to an account. He confessed, that their affairs were very much embarrassed, and that they were still in great confusion. He observed that the Parliament was in great distress, while the common enemy was high and strong. He added, that their extraordinary successes hitherto were owing to the prayers of their brethren of Scotland, and of other Protestants abroad, as well as to their own. He then mentioned with deep concern some other restraints which the Assembly lay under, but that this was not a proper time for redress.* In the year 1647, Mr Herle and Mr Stephen Marshall were appointed to attend the commissioners of Parliament to Scotland, with a view to give the Scots a just account of the affairs of England. After the King's death, Mr Herle retired to his flock and stated ministerial labours in the Lord's vineyard at Winwick, where he continued the remainder of his days, and was very much beloved by his brethren in the ministry in that country.

In the year 1651, the Earl of Derby having raised a regiment of soldiers for Charles Second, who was then on his march from Scotland, he sent Lieutenant Arundal, with about forty horses, to Mr Herle's house at Winwick, which filled the whole family with the utmost consternation, expecting that they would be immediately plundered and ruined. When Arundal arrived at the house, he said to Mr Herle, "My business is to tell you, that the Earl of Derby wishes you to come to him with all speed; and if you will go, there shall be no farther trouble to you nor your family." Mr Herle replied, "I will go immediately, and wait upon the right honourable the Earl of Derby, my patron;" and ordered his horse to be brought out. After some kind entertainment of the lieutenant and his soldiers, Mr Herle accompanied them to the Earl's quarters, who received and treated him with the utmost civility. After some friendly conversation with him, his lordship sent him back, attended by a guard of soldiers. It has also been observed, that, after the battle of Warrington-bridge, in this year, Arundal's forces being routed, and himself wounded, he retired to Mr Herle's house, where he was treated with the utmost kindness.* Mr Herle was appointed, together with Mr Isaac Ambrose, Mr Edward Gee, and some others, assistant to the commissioners for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters in Lancashire. Dr Grey says, that, in this office, he acted "with great severity; and how well he was qualified for such dirty work, his public sermons sufficiently testify." He then transcribes from those sermons the following expressions, in order to prove the charge which he has brought against him: "Do justice to the greatest. Saul's sons are not spared; no, nor Agag; nor Benhadad, though themselves kings. Zimri and Cosbi, though princes of the people, must be pursued to their tents. What an army of martyrs has God given to the fire for our reformation at first! What a calendar of traitors has he given to the gallows, for our preservation since!" Mr Brook, in his account of Mr Herle, well observes here,—"Whether these expressions afford sufficient evidence of the doctor's charge, or whether he designed it only to reproach the memory of this celebrated divine, every intelligent reader will easily judge. The character of Mr Herle is too well established to be at all impaired by any such calumny."

a. Brook's Lives of the Puritans, vol. iii. p. 325.

The very famous Mr John Howe was ordained at Winwick, by Mr Herle, with the assistance of several other ministers; on which account Mr Howe would sometimes say, "That he thought few in modern times had so truly primitive an ordination; for he considered Mr Herle as a primitive bishop."^a Dr Fuller says, that he was a good scholar, and esteemed by his party a deep divine; and that he was so much the Christian, the scholar, and the gentleman, that he could agree in affection with those who differed from him in judgment.^b He died at Winwick, toward the end of September, in the year 1659, aged sixty-one years; and his remains were interred in his own church.^c

A few choice sayings of Mr Herle, which have been collected from his writings, are here subjoined, in order that the reader may obtain a fuller view of his true character. By their fruits ye shall know them.— "Thankfulness is the best tenure; it gives the surest title to new mercies.—Religious families are the surest nurseries of religion." And speaking of the influence which the bad example of parents has on their children, he says, "That a Cain will not want others to go on in his way, nor a Jeroboam followers in making Israel to sin.—The highest office of government is, to be the nurse, the guardian, of religion.—Peace without contentment, is but lethargy; safety without it, is but a prison; but contentment without both, is a continual feast, a kingdom. The proud man hath no God, the unpeaceable man hath no neighbour, the distrustful man hath no friend, but the discontented man hath not himself.—As use gives things perfection, so usefulness gives them value.—Let divine truths be believed, others proved.—Long discourses are over-feathered arrows, that over-shoot the mark, and ordinarily lose both game and labour by wearying the attention. Our discourse should be to the matter, a Middleton's Biogr. Evang. vol. iv. Howe.

b Worthies of England, and Church Hist. B. xi. p. 213.

c Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

as trimming to clothes, rather proper than gaudy, rather fit than fine. Affectation in any thing, especially in words, argues more ambition, than ability; and discovers a narrow soul, that is fain to take up forms and examples instead of reason, and dares not write but by a copy.—Injuries, if we are not wanting to ourselves, are the greatest advantages, as well as trials, in our whole lives. Courtesies, applauses, successes, steal us out of ourselves. Injuries restore us to ourselves again; it is in our patience we possess our souls. Would we instead of making a return of injuries on others, make a retirement by them into ourselves, we should find them the best restoratives of our minds to themselves.

Mr Herle was the author of several practical and controversial writings, which praise him in the gate.

1. Microcosmography, in Essays and Characters, 1628; small book.—2. Contemplations and Devotions on the several Passages of our blessed Saviour's Death and Passion; a small volume, pp. 546. London; 1631.—
3. An Answer to misled Dr Hen. Fearn, according to his own method of his book; 4to. London, 1642.—
4. Several Sermons, among which are the following:—A Pair of Compasses for Church and State; a Sermon from Zech. viii. 19. at Margaret's, Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their monthly Fast, Nov. last, 1642. 4to. London, 1642.—David's Song of three Parts; a Sermon from Psal. xcv. 1. before the Honourable House of Lords, 15th of June, 1643. 4to. pp. 29. London, 1643.—David's Reserve and Rescue; a Sermon from 2 Sam. xxi. 16, 17. before the Honourable House of Commons, Nov. 5th, 1644. 4to. pp. 18. London, 1645.—Three Sermons, 1 Kings xxii. 22. Wood mentions other Sermons by Mr Herle, but says that he had not then seen these, nor have I seen them; to wit, Abraham's Offering, before the Mayor and Aldermen of London, from Gen. xxii. 2. London, 1644. And a Sermon from 2 Sam. xxii. 22. London, 1644. A Thanksgiving Sermon, before the House of Commons, 12th of May, 1646, and a Fast Sermon before the House of Lords, the same year.—5. The Independency on Scriptures of the Independency of Churches. In this performance the Question of the Independency of Church government is temperately stated, fairly argued, and particularly cleared from objections. 4to. pp 44. London, 1643.—6. Worldly Policy and Moral Prudence; the vanity and folly of the one, and the solidity and usefulness of the other, in a moral Discourse; a small book, London, 1654. This book was printed again, in the year 1655, under the title of Wisdom's Tripos, in three Treatises. 1. Of Worldly Policy. 2. Of Moral Prudence. 3. Of Christian Wisdom. The vanity of the first, the usefulness of the second, and the excellency of the third. An excellent book. It was also printed; London, 1670.

RICHARD HEYRICK, A. M. OF MANCHESTER,

A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

RICHARD HEYRICK was born in London, and educated in Merchant Taylor's school. He was a younger son of Sir William Heyrick of Beaumannour in Leicestershire. He became commoner of St John's college in Oxford, in the beginning of the year 1617, aged seventeen years. In due time, he took the degrees in arts, and was elected fellow of All-Soul's college, in the same University, in the year 1624, and about that time he entered into holy orders. Afterward he was pastor of a church in Norfolk, and made warden of Christ's college in Manchester, in Lancashire in England, by means of Archbishop Laud. Upon the commencement of the civil wars, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, and was chosen a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He is called in Neal's list, "Mr Richard Heyrick of Manchester," and marked as constantly attending the Assembly. He took the Covenant, and is said to have been very zealous in promoting the interests of the Reformation. In the year 1644, Mr Heyrick, and other ministers, to the number of twenty-one, had full power given them by an ordinance which passed the Houses of Parliament, for the benefit of the county of Lancaster, to ordain ministers for a time in that county.* He was concerned in that affair respecting the restoration or expedition of Charles II. into England, after his father's death, which has been called Love's plot, as he was a principal sufferer on account of it. It was formed by a number of gentlemen and ministers, and designed to raise money by private contribution, to forward the expedition of Charles II. into England; but the object was soon discovered and defeated by the great vigilance of the commonwealth, which had its active spies in all places. The celebrated Mr Christopher Love and Mr Gibbons were made public examples, as a terror to other persons, when some, by petitioning for mercy, and promising submission to the government in time to come, were released, and escaped the severity of the storm. Several persons absconded; but in what manner Mr Heyrick came off, I cannot tell. Be that as it may, he was afterward appointed an assistant to the commissioners for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters in Lancashire. Wood says, "Upon the approach of his Majesty's Restoration, he seemed to be zealous for it, and turning about, as many of his party did, he kept his wardenship to his dying day." He died on the sixth day of Aug. 1667, aged 67 years, and his remains were interred in the collegiate church of Manchester. Soon after there was a comely monument put over his grave at the charge of Anna Maria, his widow, with a large inscription thereon, which was composed by his ancient and real friend, Thomas Case, Minister of the Gospel in London, who had been intimately acquainted with Mr Heyrick while he was a student in the University of Oxford. This inscription gives Mr Heyrick a very eminent character, as a person of genteel extraction, a most diligent student, a most faithful pastor, and a most watchful guardian of his college. A man of solid judgment, with acute penetration, of singular zeal mingled with remarkable prudence, of great gravity, accompanied with much sweetness of manners and true humility. He is allowed to have been a man of great learning.^a

He has published several sermons, among which are the following:—Three sermons preached in the collegiate church of Manchester, from Psalm cxxii. 6. 2 Thess. ii. 15. and Gen. xlix. 5, 6, 7. London, 1641.—Queen Esther's Resolves: or, A Princely Pattern of Heaven-born Resolution, for all the Lovers of God and their country; a Sermon preached from Esther iv. 16. before the House of Commons, at the monthly Fast, 27th of May, 1646. 4to. London, 1646. I have seen this sermon, in Wigtonshire, and in Ayrshire, in Scotland. It is said, that he has a sermon from Gal. iv. 16. And Wood mentions a sermon of his from 2 Kings xi. 12. 4to. London, 1661. But these two I have not seen.

GASPAR HICKES, A. M.

PASTOR OF LAUDRAKE IN CORNWALL, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

GASPAR HICKES was the son of a Minister, and was born in Berkshire, an inland county in England. He was educated in Trinity-college in Oxford, where he entered in the year 1621, aged sixteen years. He took the degrees in arts, and entered upon the holy ministry, and at length became pastor of Laudrake, or Lawrick, in the county of Cornwall. Here he continued a constant, diligent, and faithful preacher, several years, under the name of a Puritan. Upon the commencement of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, openly and plainly expressed his sentiments in his sermons, and shewed his zeal in that cause. When the royalists entered that country and were prevalent, he found his situation uneasy, and retired to London. He was chosen a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, took his seat there, and constantly attended. He preached frequently in London, and sometimes before the Parliament. Afterward, upon the declining of the King's interest, he returned to his pastoral charge in Cornwall. In the year 1654, he was appointed an assistant to the commissioners of Cornwall for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters in that county. And Wood says, that "ever after, till the Act of Conformity came forth, he was esteemed there the chief of the Presbyterian Ministers." Being ejected, by the Act of Uniformity, in 1662, from Laudrake, he continued to live there, and near that place, several years, preaching always as he had opportunity; but in that honourable and good work he met with much trouble and disturbance. Continuing, after May 30, 1670, to preach in his family, to the number which the Act against Conventicles allowed, with some other persons under sixteen years of age, Mr Winnel, the young parson of Laudrake, was greatly enraged, and informed against him, as keeping conventicles, and caused his house to be searched by the officers of the parish, who found but four persons there above the age of sixteen, beside his own family. The furious zealot rode from Justice to Justice to convict Mr Hickes, but the gentlemen in the neighbourhood would not give him any countenance, being sensible that the law was not violated. Upon this he went into Devonshire, where he found some Justices for his purpose, who convicted Mr Hickes; and taking it for granted that he preached, though there was no proof of it, they levied £40 upon him. Mr Hickes appealed to the next general sessions, where, contrary to law, he was denied a Jury, and the Justices passed sentence of judgment upon him by vote, and his appeal hereby being made unjust, they beside the £40 gave treble cost against him, and at the same time loaded him with foul reproaches. Poor dissenters sometimes have not had common justice. But, Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets who were before you.

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. 2d edit.

Mr Hickes died in the year 1677, about the seventy-third year of his age. His remains were buried, according to his own desire, in the porch of the parish church of Laudrake, and many pious persons attended his funeral.

He has published some sermons, as, The Glory and Beauty of God's Portion, a sermon from Isai. xxviii 5. 6. before the Honourable House of Commons, at the Public Fast, June 26, 1644. 4to. pp. 43. London, 1644. The Life and Death of David, a sermon at the Death of Will. Strode, Esq. from Acts xiii. 36. 4to. Lond. 1645. The Advantage of Afflictions, a sermon from Hos. v. 15. before the House of Peers, Fast, 4to. pp. 31. London, 1645. Dr Calamy says, that he was a good scholar, and a celebrated preacher.^a

THOMAS HILL, D. D.

PASTOR OF TICHMARSH, IN THE COUNTY OF NORTHAMPTON, A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER, AND MASTER OF EMANUEL AND OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

THOMAS HILL was born in Worcestershire, in England, of godly parents, who solemnly dedicated him unto God in his childhood. This duty, which is shamefully neglected by us, was, among our forefathers, an object of chief attention. His parents also, with great cheerfulness, resolved to educate him for the important work of the holy ministry. And, having received a well directed education in the country, he was afterward sent to Emanuel college, in the University of Cambridge. Here, he was eminently distinguished by his close application to his studies, and by his sobriety. The grace of God, which sanctifies our natures, and refines our manners, did now shine in him, with peculiar lustre, in his early youth. In this critical season of life, he was taught to despise the allurements, the deceitful, and transitory pleasures of sin; and to devote the first and the best of his days to the service of his Maker and Redeemer. Such deportment is most beautiful and becoming in young persons, and highly worthy of imitation. This justly entitled him to respectful notice among the governors of the College; who, upon examination, elected him scholar of the house.

a Calamy's Acc. vol. ii. p. 136. Cont. p. 175. Wood's Ath. vol. ii.

Afterward, he went to spend some time, for his farther improvement in useful knowledge and true piety, with the eminently pious and learned Mr Cotton, at Boston, in Lincolnshire. Mr Cotton's suitable directions, and his striking and exemplary piety, were highly beneficial to this well-disposed scholar, and had a powerful tendency to improve his mind, and his religious principles, which continued with him through the whole journey of life.

He gained a shining and lasting reputation, in a short time, by his piety and learning: and upon his return to the College, he was soon chosen a Fellow, with general approbation, after an uncommonly strict examination. And now, he became a very careful, diligent, and successful, tutor to young scholars, for some time. He afterward commenced a preacher of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. His fame soon spread, and he was called to the pastoral charge of Tichmarsh, in Northamptonshire, in England, where he discharged the duties of his ministerial office with much steadiness and fidelity, about eight or nine years. He was chosen into the respectable Assembly of Divines at Westminster, for the county of Northampton. He was very useful in this public and important service. He was often employed by the Parliament to preach before them at their Fasts, and upon other solemn occasions. While he was at London, he preached on the Lord's-day at St Martin's in the Fields, a large congregation, where he was highly beneficial to many souls. And he was chosen to be one of the Morning Lecturers at Westminster Abbey. He was afterward elected to be Master of Emanuel-college, in the University of Cambridge; and from thence he was removed to the Mastership of Trinity-college. In these superior stations, this illustrious luminary of the Christian church behaved with great prudence and circumspection. He was principally attentive to promote piety and learning, in these seminaries. He preached very frequently in their chapel, and wrote to their seniors. His views were really noble, and his conduct very suitable to the genius of the religion which he professed. He always seconded his arguments, by the victorious power of an exemplary life. That gentleness of manners, which greatly sweetens the intercourse of human society, was very conspicuous in him. In his general behaviour, he was meek and condescending; but he always retained the dignity of his character, and was readily moved with just indignation, at the least appearance of sin and corruption. He was also eminently distinguished by his ardent zeal for the honours, privileges, and emoluments, of the University. He was two years vice-chancellor. This eminent divine firmly believed, constantly preached, and strenuously defended, the all-important doctrines of God's sovereignty in his decrees;—of his free love and grace in election;—of justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ;—and of the final perseverance of the saints in a state of grace. At his death, he intimated to one of his friends, that he then derived singular comfort from these doctrines, as many other eminent Christians have also done, in this very trying season.

In his preaching, he was plain, powerful, spiritual, and frequent. Both our blessed Saviour and his apostles preached the glorious Gospel of the grace of God, in the plainest manner. They wisely adapted their discourses even to the meanest capacities of their hearers, whose knowledge often was as low as their external condition, that all men might know the Lord from the least to the greatest. This mode of preaching, as one well observes, "hath always an air of candour and sincerity, and thereby the labour of tedious inquiry is prevented."—Some preachers, in order to conceal unpopular opinions, and to put on an air of orthodoxy, use expressions which may be interpreted, with equal ease, to divers, and even contrary, purposes.—Remarkable, in this case, is that very striking passage, 1 Cor. xiv. 8, 9. For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle? So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue, words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air. "If this be a good argument against preaching in an unknown tongue, it is equally good against every thing else that disguises, instead of unfolding our sentiments of Christianity. The apostles used great plainness of speech; and it is an apostolical injunction, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." Let his style be plain and clear, like that of the sacred writings; not dark and ambiguous, like the oracles of the Heathen."^a And powerful preaching, calculated to command a reverent attention, to strike the conscience, and to warm and affect the heart, well becomes ministers of the glorious Gospel of the Son of God. They ought to speak with dignity and holy boldness, not fearing the face of man. "Favour should not bribe, nor frowns nor dangers affright us, from delivering our Master's message."^b Insipid sermons, in which a pathetic address is wanting, seldom warm the heart, or arouse the hearer. "Soft and drowsy harangues, instead of rousing a secure generation, will rather increase their spiritual lethargy; and a cold preacher will soon have a cold auditory. Jesus has intrusted us with the concerns of his people, a people dearly bought, and greatly beloved; we have to do with souls, that must be happy or miserable for ever; we address them, in the name of God, upon matters of infinite importance; and is it not an indignity to Him whose ambassadors we are, to execute our commission coolly, and as if half asleep? Will it not tempt others to slight our message, if, by the manner of delivering it, we appear to slight it ourselves? When our own hearts are most impressed with the inestimable worth of immortal souls; when out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, when our sentiments, style, voice, and gesture, discover how much we are in earnest; then we are most likely to touch the hearts of our hearers, and make them feel the force of what we say." And, spiritual preaching, suited to the spiritual state of the flock, and to the dispensations of Divine Providence respecting them, is, undoubtedly, highly useful and important. And, the Lord Jesus Christ, and salvation through his name, ought to be frequently preached. The subject of this memoir was a most diligent, faithful, and laborious, preacher of the Gospel of Christ, during the whole of his public ministry, and especially toward the period of his life in this world. Beside his preaching in the University, he set up a lecture every Sabbath-morning, in one church in the town, which was performed only by himself, and cheerfully frequented both by many scholars and inhabitants of the town; and one lecture in another church, every Lord's-day in the afternoon, in which he did bear at least, the fourth part of the burden; and both gratis. He also preached occasionally in several adjacent towns and villages; and was instrumental in setting up lectures in some of them, and often assisted at these lectures. When near the end of his journey to the promised land; he was eminently distinguished by his unwearied zeal, and his unremitting industry, in faithfully discharging the trust which was committed to him. He continued stedfast and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; and his labours were attended with much success.

^a The Scotch Preacher, vol. i. ser. v. Dr Erskine. 2d edit.

^b Dr Erskine, as above.

Though naturally modest, yet when the case required, he appeared with boldness and with spirit, in a good cause. Being endowed with a very public spirit, he was deeply interested in the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. His other eminent qualities were richly adorned with much humility, very low thoughts of himself, an agreeable, familiar, and instructive, conversation, an affable condescending manner in society, and with true benevolence, which shed its kindly beams for the relief and comfort of many really indigent persons. Like the good Samaritan, he often poured balm into the wounded mind, delivered the poor who cried, and the fatherless, and him who had none to help him.

He was seized with a long continued quartan-ague, which did bear the marks of mortality. In the lucid intervals of his trouble, he improved his time, in making close inquiry respecting his peace with Heaven, and his readiness for his passage into the world unknown.—In his short sickness, he expressed to one of his friends, his great comfort and joy, in God's free discriminating electing love. To Dr Tuckney, about half an hour before his departure, who made inquiry respecting the settlement of his outward estate, and of his inward peace, he readily, and without any hesitation, answered, Through the mercy of God in Christ, his peace was made, and that he quietly rested in it. Then, with tranquillity, he suddenly departed, Dec. 18th 1653, in an advanced age, very much lamented by his acquaintance and brethren.

Having settled his peace with God, through the Lord Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, who has made peace by the blood of his cross, the king of terrors appeared now to be transformed into an angel of peace, to waft his immortal soul into the blissful mansions in a better world, where neither sin nor sorrow can enter. The Redeemer's death is the Christian's strongest consolation, and best antidote to the fears of death. And there is always some peculiarity in the death of the real Christian. "There is a majesty in the death of the Christian: He partakes of the spirit of that world to which he is advancing, and he meets his latter end with a face that looks to the heavens." *

a Logan's Sermons, vol. i. ser. vii. end.—See Dr Tuckney's Ser. at Dr Hill's Fun. Lon. 1654. and Clark's Lives.

Mr Neal, in his History of the Puritans, says, that Dr Hill "was a good scholar, and very careful of the Antiquities and Privileges of the University; a strict Calvinist, a plain, powerful, and practical, Preacher, and of an holy and unblameable conversation." "A holy life is the most persuasive sermon, expressed too in a language which men of all nations equally understand. It even explains what other sermons mean, instead of needing to be explained by them. Men will see more beauty in a truly virtuous action, than in the most rhetorical description we can give of it; and then they lose no time, for they see it at once: whereas, besides the necessary expence of time, much skill and address must likewise be employed, to unfold it in such a manner as to make it thoroughly understood and relished."^a

Our reformers were eminently distinguished by a holy life, the importance of which is well expressed by Mr Walker. In this way, the ministers of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God preached without ceasing. They exhibited continually the amiable religion of Jesus, in their practice, and afforded an easy opportunity of reading the wholesome laws of Christ's house every day.—That alone can be accounted true religion, which dwells in the heart, and which constantly displays its peculiar influence in the life.—Dr Hill was a divine very eminent for humility and holiness, an excellent and useful preacher, and of great learning and moderation; but no friend to Arminianism. He used to lay his hand upon his breast, and say, "Every true Christian has something here, that will frame an argument against Arminianism."^b Mr Henry Oatland, one of the ejected ministers, who was one of his pupils, and admitted into Trinity college while he was master, observes, that he derived unspeakable advantage from Dr Hill's plain but truly excellent method of preaching and advancing Christ. He says, "that he learned more of Christ in one year, from Dr Hill's preaching, and almost daily expositions in the chapel, than he had all his time before in the country."^a Mr John Machin, another of the ejected ministers, going to the University, without any view to the ministry, or to continue there, on his first going thither, had a gracious change effected in him, chiefly by the preaching of Dr Hill; and that of Dr Arrowsmith was much to his comfort and edification. No sooner did he find this blessed change in his heart, than his friends found it by his letters; by which, together with his exemplary conversation afterward, he was the means of converting his three sisters, and there was room to hope, both his parents, as Mr Palmer informs us, in his Nonconformist's Memorial, Dr Hill was very highly esteemed by the Earl of Warwick, in whose family he became acquainted with Mrs Willford, governess to the Earl's daughter, whom he afterward married. When the committee of accommodation was appointed by the House of Lords, to consider the innovations in religion, Dr Hill, with several bishops and other learned divines, was chosen a member of the sub-committee, to prepare materials for their debate. And, when the committee of accommodation was revived by order of Parliament, he was appointed one of its learned members.^b—In the University, he diligently employed all his talents and zeal in the advancement of sound learning and genuine piety, and in the due observance of college exercises.

^a Mr Walker's Sermons, of Edin. vol. i. ser. i.

^b Firmin's Real Christian, p. 26. Edit. 1670.

He was the author of several pieces, chiefly sermons before the Parliament, among which are: 1. The Trade of Truth Advanced, in a Sermon from Prov. xxiii. 23. to the Honourable House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, 27th of July, 1642. 4to. pp. 59. London, 1642.—2. The Militant Church Triumphant over the Dragon and his Angels; a Sermon preached from Rev. xii. 11. to both Houses of Parliament, at an extraordinary Fast, 21st of July, 1643. 4to. pp. 31. London, 1643.—3. The Good Old Way, God's Way to Soul-refreshing Rest;

^a Calamy's Contin. vol. ii. p. 885.

^b Broke's Puritans, vol. iii.

a Sermon from Jer. vi. 16. to the Lord Mayor, and Court of Aldermen of London, 24th April, 1644, Fast. London, 1644.—4. The Season for England's Self-Reflection, and Advancing Temple-Work; a Sermon preached from Hag. i. 7, 8. to the two Houses of Parliament, Aug. 13, 1644, being an extraordinary day of Humiliation 4to. pp. 37. London, 1644.—5. The Right Separation Encouraged, in a Sermon preached from 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18. to the Right Honourable the House of Lords, in the Abbey-church at Westminster, on Wednesday, Nov. 27th, 1644, being the day of the monthly public Fast. 4to. pp. 35. London, 1645. It is said, that Dr Hill has several other Sermons; but I have not seen these.

THOMAS HODGES, B. D.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT KENSINGTON, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

THOMAS HODGES was Minister of the Gospel at Kensington, in the county of Middlesex, near London; several years. He was at Kensington when he was chosen to be a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He took his seat in that Assembly, and gave constant attendance during the session. He was a Covenanter, and preached sometimes before the Parliament. Some sermons which he preached before the Parliament were then printed, and are still extant. In a sermon which he preached before the Honourable House of Commons, from 2 Pet. ii. 2. and in his epistle dedicatory, which is prefixed to that sermon, he complains very much of the growth and spreading of heresy, and of the fruitfulness of the press in producing many monstrous misshapen births. He says, in his address to the learned and brave patriots, "Is it not time to cry to you for help? There is nothing more excellent than God's truth, nor of more concernment than man's soul; both lie a-bleeding." Mr Hodges maintained, as our reformers did, in general, that the care and reformation of religion belonged to civil rulers, and constituted one of the principal duties of their office. Accordingly, he farther adds, in the above-mentioned sermon, in addressing the House of Commons, "I beseech you shew mercy to lovely Truth, that beam of glory, daughter of heaven, that clue of mercy let down into this dark erring world, to lead us through the many labyrinths of a benighted mind, erring thoughts, misleading examples, and dark temptations, to bliss and happiness. For she suffers, and is here like to perish from us, and be utterly lost, or at least shrewdly eclipsed, if you relieve her not." What have we to leave posterity, so precious as this Way of Truth? If that be gone, the glory is departed from Israel, and farewell all. Have we received it from our ancestors in lustre and purity, and is it not grievous to us, that in our time it should be so mangled and defaced, that our children after us, except it be timely prevented, will scarcely be able to distinguish between it and error? Why did the valiant Martyrs shed their precious blood, but to maintain this way of truth? And shall we lose and let it go at so cheap a rate, and not mourn for it? The Jews of old, when they heard blasphemy, used to rend their cloaths, to testify the inward rending of their hearts: Can ours be whole when the foolish people so much defame God's truth, and blaspheme his name?" He concludes his sermon, with recommending to the learned auditory, to encourage catechising, whereby poor souls may be taught the principles of religion in the plainest manner, and that there might be milk for babes.—To plant a learned and able Ministry in every eminent place. And here, he says, "Give me leave to suggest unto you, That there are many learned men in this kingdom, whom God hath not gifted with elocution and other the like abilities for pulpit-work, yet would be very fit to maintain the Truth by their pen, against destroying errors, might they but have encouragement." He adds, "Settle with all convenient speed your Confession of Faith, wherein people may take notice what is allowed for Truth, upon mature debate;—and with little pains discern what is right or wrong.” And that error might be effectually suppressed, and truth established, he advises the worthy senators, as the guardians and foster-fathers of Truth, to take special care of the Universities, that learning and piety be sufficiently encouraged in these useful fountains. And that reading the Holy Scriptures, and pious exercises, might be more in use among them. Wood says, that after his Majesty’s restoration, Mr Hodges became rector of St Peter’s church in Cornhill, London, and dean of Hereford in the place of Dr H Croft who was made bishop thereof in 1661; and that holding that deanery to the time of his death, he was succeeded therein by Dr George Benson about Mid-summer, in the year 1672.*

His writings.—1. A Glimpse of God’s Glory; a Sermon from Psalm cxiii. 5, 6. before the House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, 28th Sept. 1642. 4to. pp. 41. Lond. 1642.—2. The Growth and Spreading of Heresy; a Sermon from 2 Pet. ii. 2. before the Honourable House of Commons, at their public Fast for the growth of heresy, 10th of March 1646. 4to. pp. 60. London, 1647.—3. Inaccessible Glory: or, The Impossibility of seeing God’s Face while we are in the body; a Sermon from Exod. xxxiii. 20. at the funeral of Sir Theod. de Mayerne, in the church of St Martin’s in the Fields, on the 30th of March, 1655. 4to. London, 1655. It is said, that he has a Sermon from Gen. i. 31. but I have not seen it.

* Wood’s Fasti Oxon., vol. ii. p. 31. 2d edit.

JOSHUA HOYLE, D. D.

PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF DUBLIN, A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER, MASTER OF UNIVERSITY-COLLEGE, OXFORD, AND KING'S PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY IN THAT UNIVERSITY.

JOSHUA HOYLE was born at Sawerby, near Halifax, in Yorkshire, in England, and educated in Magdalen-college, Oxford. Afterward, being invited into Ireland, he became fellow of Trinity-college, Dublin. He took his degrees in divinity, and was chosen professor of divinity in that University. He was exceedingly eager to redeem the time, and indefatigable both in his studies and other labours. He seems to have been for some time greatly captivated with scholastic studies, and to have prosecuted these with much success, as many eminent reformers have done. But he greatly preferred the study of the Holy Scriptures to that of scholastic theology. He was led to the Sacred Writings as the alone pure fountain of divine truth. He soon became a profound divine; and being now placed in a sphere of great usefulness, he laboured with unwearied assiduity, in promoting the interests of religion. In his daily lectures, as professor of divinity, he expounded the whole Bible, seldom taking more than one verse at a time, which lasted about fifteen years. Some time before he had ended that great work, he began the second exposition of the whole Bible in the church of Trinity-college, and in about ten years he went through the greatest part of the sacred volume. He preached and expounded thrice every Sabbath for the far greater part of the year, and also on many extraordinary occasions. To these unwearied labours may be added his learned weekly lectures, as professor, in the controversies, and his elaborate answers to the great champion Bellarmine, one of the most celebrated controversialists of the Romish church. Bellarmine was very highly esteemed by the court of Rome, and had the reputation of being one of the most strenuous defenders of the Catholic religion against the reformers. And so very formidable were his controversial labours accounted, that for many years almost every eminent protestant divine endeavoured to make the arguments of Bellarmine a particular object of refutation. The great work which has furnished matter for this critical warfare, is a Body of Controversy, which was written in Latin, and has been often re-printed, in 4 vols. folio. Dr Hoyle boldly and successfully attacked the system of error and corruption in the Romish church. He has discovered to the world that Mystery of Iniquity, as Hercules did Cacus's den. Or, as Theodosius used those idolatrous temples in Egypt, when all the ridiculous toys of Pagan priests, and their cheating tricks were brought upon the stage. He prepared answers to all Bellarmine, both in word and writing. He began with the cardinal's work respecting the seven sacraments, which he was more than eight years in finishing. Afterward, he proceeded in his answers to the other controversial pieces of the great champion of the Romish church. Dr Hoyle was one of our eminent reformers, "who, having forced the strong-hold of superstition, and penetrated the recesses of its temple, tore aside the veil that concealed the monstrous idol which the whole world ignorantly worshipped, dissolved the magic spell by which the human mind was bound, and restored it to liberty." In the year 1634, he sat in the convocation which was held at Dublin. But, upon the commencement of the rebellion in Ireland, in the year 1641, he fled from the terrible effusion of blood. According to the computation of the popish priests themselves, who were actively employed in this dreadful rebellion, upward of one hundred and fifty-four thousand protestants were massacred in Ireland in the space of a few months: but, during the continuance of that horrid rebellion, according to Sir J. Temple, there were above three hundred thousand cruelly murdered in cold blood, or ruined in some other way. Cardinal Richelieu was deeply concerned in this barbarous massacre; and, according to Rapin, in his History of England, King Charles I. spread abroad that the Roman Catholics had his authority for what they did. Dr Hoyle's life being exposed to the most imminent hazard, he now returned to England, and became vicar of Stepney, near London; but, according to Wood, he, being too scholastical, did not please the parishioners. Be that as it may, he was always esteemed an eminent Puritan, and a zealous advocate for civil and religious liberty. While he remained at Stepney, the celebrated Mr Burroughs preached there in the morning, and Mr Greenhill in the afternoon. In the year 1643, Dr Hoyle was appointed a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and constantly attended. Dr Calamy says, "This Dr Hoyle was a member of great esteem and honour in the Assembly of Divines, as a master of all the ancient learning of the Greek and Latin fathers, and one who reigned both in his chair and in the pulpit."^a He was witness against Archbishop Laud at his trial, when he attested that the Archbishop had corrupted the University of Dublin, by the arbitrary introduction of the errors of popery and Arminianism, while he was chancellor of that University.—He was appointed one of the select committee for the examination and approbation of ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. In the year 1645, he was elected one of committee of accommodation; and in 1648, he became master or head of University-college, Oxford, and King's professor of divinity in that University, in the room of Dr Saunderson. In the office of professor of divinity he has incurred the severe and unjust animadversion of Dr Walker, who seldom fails to dip his pen in the very gall of bitterness, when he meets with the Puritans. This illiberal and abusive writer says, that Dr Hoyle opened his lectures by a speech void of all spirit or learning; and that his lectures had neither method nor argument in them, and shewed him to be ignorant even of the most common rules of logic.^b Wood, however, says, that "he was a person of great reading and memory, much devoted to study, and in a manner a stranger to the world and things thereof, profound in the faculty of divinity, a constant preacher, and a noted Puritan." He was eminently learned, indefatigably industrious, and is allowed to have been as well qualified for an academic as any person of his time. He was eminently distinguished by the unwearied assiduity with which he laboured in the stations which were assigned to him. He died on the 6th of Dec. 1654, and his remains were interred in the old chapel belonging to the University-college. His successors in the offices of master and professor were Mr Francis Johnson and Dr John Conant, who were both silenced non-conformists, in 1662. Dr Hoyle was very highly respected by the famous Archbishop Usher. In vindication of this eminently learned prelate, he wrote "A Rejoynder to Mr Malone's Reply concerning Real Presence." 4to, pp. 662. Dublin, 1641. This is a very learned and elaborate work.

^a Calamy's Account, vol. ii. p. 472.

^b Attempt, part. i. p. 141.

JOHN JACKSON, A. M.

A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JOHN JACKSON, in the ordinance of the Parliament, for calling an Assembly of learned and godly divines, is said to be, John Jackson of Marske. In Mr Neal's list of that Assembly, he is styled, John Jackson, A. M. of Queen's college, Cambridge. Wood mentions several persons of the name, as John Jackson, M. A. of Cambridge, it seems, born in Lancashire, beneficed in Essex, and author of several tracts of practical divinity, as of A Taste of the Truth as it is in Jesus, &c. A John Jackson, who translated from Latin into English, a book entitled, De Immortalitate Animæ. John Jackson, who has an exact Concordance of the Bible. Wood adds: "There was also one John Jackson, Parson of Marsh in Richmondshire, who hath written, The faithful Minister of Jesus Christ, described by polishing the twelve Stones in the High Priest's Pectoral, &c. London, 1628. This John Jackson was one of the Assembly of Divines, in the year 1643, and Preacher of Gray's-Inn." ^a Mr Jackson is represented as constantly attending the Assembly during the session. I have not received any farther information respecting him.

a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. i. Fasti, p. 279. 2d edit.

JOHN LANGLEY,

A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JOHN LANGLEY was Minister of West-Tuderly, in the county of Southampton, in England. He was elected one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, in the year 1643. He gave constant attendance during the session. He preached to the House of Commons. Wood says, that he became a publisher of several matters of divinity. I have seen and read a sermon of his, which is entitled, The Mournful Note of the Dove. It was preached from Psalm lxxiv. 19, 20. at Margaret's, Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, Dec. 25, 1644. 4to. pp. 32. London, 1644. I am not able to give any further account of Mr Langley.

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. i. Fasti, p. 279. 2d edit.

JOHN LEY, A. M.

MINISTER OF GREAT BUDWORTH, IN CHESHIRE, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JOHN LEY was born in the ancient borough of Warwick, in England, on the 4th day of Feb. in the year 1589. He was descended from those of that name in Cheshire. In due time, he was sent to the free Grammar-school in Warwick. He became a student of Christ's Church-college, Oxford, in the year 1601, where, having continued a considerable time, he proceeded master of arts. Having finished his studies at the University, he was presented to the vicarage of Great Budworth in Cheshire, where he continued a constant preacher for several years. He was minister of Great Budworth in the year 1643, when he was chosen a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He was made prebendary of the Cathedral church at Chester, and sub-dean thereof, where he had a weekly lecture at St Peter's church, and was once or twice elected member of the convocation. But having always been puritanically inclined, he, upon the commencement of the civil war, espoused the cause of the Parliament, took the covenant, his seat in the Assembly of Divines, and he was appointed examiner in Latin to that famous Assembly.

Mr Ley became rector of Ashfield in Cheshire, and for a short time, rector of Astbury in the same county, chairman of the committee for the examination and approbation of ministers, one of the committee of printing, and one of the committee for the ordination of ministers according to the Presbyterian form. About the year 1645, he was chosen president of Sion College, and about the same time, he was inducted into the rich living of Brightwell in Berkshire. In the year 1653, he was appointed one of the tryers of ministers, and, in the following year, an assistant to the commissioners of Berkshire for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters. After some time he resigned his living of Brightwell, and was presented to that of Solihull in Warwickshire. He continued in that place some time; but by too much exertion and constant preaching, he broke a blood-vessel; and being disabled in such a manner that he could not fulfil the duties of his office, he resigned his charge, and retired to Sutton Colfield in the same county, where he lived privately the rest of his days.

A certain writer has placed Mr Ley at the head of those divines who, he says, "encouraged tumults," and whom, in great derision, he styles "able, holy, faithful, laborious, and truly peaceable preachers of the Gospel." The proof of his accusation is contained in Mr Ley's own words, which are as follows:—"It is not unknown, nor unobserved by the wise, that the ministers have been very serviceable to the civil state, and to the military too; not only by their supplications to God for good success in all their undertakings, and their happy proceedings in all their warlike marches and motions, as at the removal of the ark, Num. x. 35. Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered: Let them who hate thee, flee before thee; but by their informations and solicitations of the people to engage both their estates and persons in the cause of God and their country." The author, having produced these, and some other citations which are similar, most triumphantly adds: "After these proofs and declarations of the ministers' zeal and industry for promoting, supporting, and carrying on the late bloody, impious, and unnatural war; let any man take upon him any longer to acquit the non-conformist divines of the guilt and consequence of that execrable rebellion." Such heavy charges should certainly be supported, by very substantial and clear evidence. Though some of the most celebrated nonconformist divines were eminently zealous in the cause of the Parliament, which they firmly believed to be the cause of God and of Truth, will any unprea L'Estranges' Dissenters' Sayings, part ii. pp. 51, 55. as with Brook, Lives Puritans, vol. iii. under J. Ley.

judiced person affirm, that they encouraged tumults, any more than those divines who were conformable? No person who is properly acquainted with the history of those very distracted times, and is without the unreasonable influence of a bigoted party spirit, will affirm any such thing. Respecting what is called the execrable rebellion, it is well known to all parties, that it originated in the most arbitrary and cruel proceedings of the haughty King and his tyrannical courtiers. Their barbarous and oppressive measures, after many woful years, led to all the horrors of a civil war. If, therefore, there was any such thing as an execrable rebellion, it may be easily seen who were the guilty persons, in raising, promoting, supporting, and carrying it on.

This eminently learned and laborious divine died on the 16th day of May, 1662, aged seventy-nine years, when he rested from his labours, and his remains were interred in the church at Sutton Colfield. Mr Ley was accounted an excellent preacher, an eminently learned and pious divine, deeply read in the fathers and councils, and one of the chief pillars of Presbyterianism.*

His writings.—1. An Apology in Defence of the Geneva Notes on the Bible. These Notes were in Mary's church in Oxford, publicly and severely reflected on by Dr John Howson. I cannot inform the reader when Mr Ley's Defence was printed; but it is said to have been written about 1612, and examined and highly approved by the celebrated Bishop Usher.—2. A Pattern of Piety: or, the religious Life and Death of Mrs Jane Ratcliff of Chester Lond. 1640.—3. Several occasional Sermons, in 1640 and the following years, one from Ruth iii. 11. Lond. 1640. A Monitor of Mortality, in two funeral Sermons, which were occasioned by the death of John Archer. Esq. son and heir of Sir Simon Archer, knight of Warwickshire, and of Mrs Harper of Chester, and her daughter, aged 12 years. 4to. London, 1643. A Sermon which is entitled, The Fury of War, and Folly of Sin, before the House of Commons, Fast, April 26, 1643, from Jer. iv. 21, 22. 4to pp. 74. London, 1643.—

 4. Sunday a Sabbath: or, a Preparative Discourse for discussion of Sabbatarian Doubts, 4to. London, 1641. He was assisted in this work, by the MSS. and advice of Archbishop Usher.—6. The Christian Sabbath maintained, in Answer to a Book of Dr Pocklington, styled, ‘Sunday no Sabbath.’ 1641.—6. Defensive Doubts, Hopes, and Reasons, for refusal of the Oath, imposed by the sixth Canon of the Synod, 4to. London, 1641.—7. A Letter against the Erection of an Altar, written June 29th, 1635, to John, Bishop of Chester, 1641.—8. Case of Conscience concerning the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper. 4to. London, 1641.—9. A Comparison of the Parliamentary Protestation with the late Canonical Oath, and the Difference between them; as also the opposition between the Doctrine of the church of England and that of Rome. 4to. London, 1641.—10. A farther Discussion of the Case of Conscience touching the receiving the Sacrament—Printed with the Comparison.—11. A Discourse concerning Puritans. 4to. 1641.—12. Examination of Mr Saltmarsh’s New Query, 4to. pp. 106. with an Epistle prefixed to the Right Honourable Thomas Adams, Lord Mayor of London, of ten pages, closely printed, London, 1646. Mr Saltmarsh’s New Query was published with a view to delay the establishment of the Presbyterian Government. And Mr Ley’s Examination and Resolution of that New Query, very clearly shews, that it is unreasonable, unsound, and opposite to the principles both of true religion and of the state.—13. Light for Smoke; or, a clear and distinct Reply to a dark and confused Answer, in a book, made and entitled, ‘The Smoke in the Temple, by John Saltmarsh.’ To this book is added, Novello-Mastix; or, A Scourge for a scurrilous News-monger, in answer to the malevolent aspersions cast upon that Rev. and learned divine, Mr John Ley. 4to. Lon. 1646.—14. An After-reckoning with Mr Saltmarsh; or, an Appeal to the impartial and conscientious Reader, 1646.—15. Annotations on the Pentateuch, and on the four Evangelists, in the English Annotations.^a—16. A learned Defence of Tithes, 1651–1653.—17. General Reasons grounded on Equity, Piety, Charity, and Justice, against the payment of a fifth part to sequestered Ministers, their Wives and children. 4to. London, 1654–55.—18. An Acquittance or Discharge from Dr E. H. (Edward Hyde) his demand of the fifth part of the Rectory of Brightwell in Berks, pleaded as in the Court of Equity and Conscience, 4to. London, 1654.—19. A Letter to Dr Edward Hyde, in Answer to one of his, occasioned by the late Insurrection at Salisbury, 1655.—20. A Debate concerning the English liturgy, between E. Hyde, D. D. and J. Ley, 4to. London, 1656.—21. A Discourse, or Disputations, chiefly concerning Matters of Religion, 4to. London, 1658.—22. Animadversions on two printed Books of J. Onely, a lay-preacher, 1658.—23. A consolatory Letter to Dr Bryan, upon the death of his dear son, 1658.—24. Equitable and necessary considerations for the Association of Arms in England and Wales.—25. A Petition to the Protector, by divers, for establishment, as Ministers of the Gospel, without induction by Bishops.—26. Comparison of the Oath of the 6th Canon of the last Synod of Bishops.—27. Attestation against errors, &c.—28. Exceptions many and just.

^a See Gataker's Life and Writings.

JOHN LIGHTFOOT, D. D.

A VERY LEARNED ENGLISH DIVINE, AND ABLE COMMENTATOR, WHO FLOURISHED IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY, AND WAS A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JOHN LIGHTFOOT was born in the Rector's house of Stoke-upon-Trent, near Newcastle under Line, in the county of Stafford, in England, upon the 29th day of the month of March, in the year 1602. He was born in the same year, on the same day, and almost at the same hour, with the celebrated Dr Arrowsmith. His father was Mr Thomas Lightfoot, a native of a little village called Shelton, in the parish of Stoke, above-mentioned; a man of great respectability, and was vicar of Uttoxeter, in Staffordshire, thirty-six years. His mother was Elizabeth Bagnall, a gentlewoman of a very respectable family, of which three males were made knights by Queen Elizabeth, for the martial skill and courage which they displayed in the wars in Ireland against the rebels. The subject of this memoir, was the second of five sons in his father's family. When he had arrived to the age, in which he was capable of learning the rudiments of grammar, he was committed to the care of Mr Whitehead, who was school-master at Morton-green, near Congerton, in the county Palatine of Chester. He continued in that place until the month of June, in the year 1617, and then he was sent to Christ's college in Cambridge. He was there admitted under the tuition of the very learned and pious Mr William Chappel, who was then Fellow of that house, and afterward was Doctor of Divinity, and Professor in Trinity-college, Dublin, and at length Bishop of Cork in Ireland. Mr Lightfoot seems to have profited much, by being, in his early years, committed to the care of eminently learned men. It was the opinion of Tasso's father, when he committed his son to the care of Angehezzo, a man of learning, "that a boy could not be put too soon under the tuition of men."

In the college, Lightfoot gave great specimens of a promising genius and lively wit. He made very great proficiency in his studies; especially in the knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages. His tutor said to some of the heads of the University, that he had a young pupil, meaning Lightfoot, whom he accounted the best orator of all the under-graduates in the town. He continued in the college, until he took the degree of bachelor of arts. He afterward was admitted as an assistant to his former master, Mr Whitehead, who was at that time master of a famous school at Repton in Derbyshire, where he continued a year or two, and made great proficiency in the Greek language. In that station, he was equally agreeable both to the master, and to the boys who were committed to his care. Some time after that, he entered into the holy ministry; and his first settlement was at Norton under Hales, in the county of Salop, or Shropshire in England. When he was there, Sir Rowland Cotton took him into his family, as his chaplain, being much pleased with his hopeful parts, upon hearing him preach. There he laid the foundation of that Rabbinical learning, for which he has been very justly and eminently distinguished, both at home and abroad. His eminently learned patron, Sir Rowland Cotton, often questioned him in the Hebrew language, in the knowledge of which he was then only a novice. His great ignorance of that beautiful language made a very deep impression upon his mind. He was greatly ashamed to be baffled by a country gentleman as he confessed he frequently was, especially in a branch of learning which belonged to his profession. The example of his patron was highly useful to him. His singular talents for the Oriental learning began now to be unfolded. Indefatigable in his literary researches, while he enjoyed a sound constitution, a vigorous mind, with a friend's company, conversation, and example, he soon acquired an extraordinary store of very useful Rabbinical knowledge, which has certainly made a great accession to the republic of letters, and contributed much to the understanding of the Holy Scriptures.

Wagenseil says, " John Lightfoot, an Englishman, a man well versed in Hebrew literature, performed a laudable work, in explaining the four Evangelists; when out of the Talmud chiefly, he studied to bring light on the sacred writers, and to illustrate some of the more obscure sayings in them. That laborious work I highly value; for the whole is filled with deep learning, and furnishes many things, of which no interpreter ever thought, nor could think of, without skill in the Talmud. Would to God he had lived to handle all the Sacred books in the same manner."

Dr Gill, in the preface to his Exposition of the New Testament, edition 1774, says, "Some may think, I have made too much use of Jewish authorities in the following Exposition; my concern is, that I have made no more use of them; and that my reading and observations have not furnished me with more materials of this kind, which I am very well satisfied might be obtained from them.—I have used all diligence, both from my own reading, and from the observations of others, to make it as perfect in this way as I could; and from none have I had so much help and assistance as from the great Dr Lightfoot, who has broke the ice for me, and pointed out the way in which I should proceed, as Wagenseil observes."

Our late commentators on the Holy Scriptures have, in general, made much use of Dr Lightfoot's valuable writings. He was without doubt one of the best Oriental scholars of his age; and also well acquainted with the Greek language—An able commentator, who has thrown much light on the Gospel History. The accurate knowledge of the original languages of the Holy Scriptures, is certainly of the greatest utility and importance, for understanding these writings. And such persons as devote themselves to the work of the holy ministry, should study, not only a competent, but also a very accurate and critical, knowledge of these deeply interesting languages. As they undertake to explain the Sacred Writings to their fellow-creatures, they should spare no pains to understand the languages in which these were originally written. Our author's laudable example may be highly useful to us, in that very delightful and interesting study.

When Sir Rowland Cotton, his good friend, went to reside at London with his family, he followed him in a short time, and having been with him there some space, he returned again to the country, and visited his parents at Stoke. He had formed a design of going into foreign countries for his improvement, but he was persuaded to change his resolution, to the great joy of his parents and friends, upon being chosen and importuned by the inhabitants of Stone in Staffordshire to be their minister. He continued there about two years. During that time, May 21, 1628, he married Joice, the daughter of William Crompton of Stone-Park, Esq. and widow of George Copwood of Dilverne in the county of Stafford. He removed from Stone to Hornsey, near London, with a view to enjoy the benefit of Sion-college library, in prosecuting his studies. To that famous library, he frequently resorted. Afterward, in the spring of the year 1630, he and his family having gone to Stoke, they remained there until the following September, when Sir Rowland Cotton preferred him to the rectory of Ashley, in the county of Stafford, where he continued in great esteem for twelve years, carefully discharging the duties of his office, and pursuing his Rabbinical studies with indefatigable application. By his unremitting diligence, his stock of knowledge very much increased.—The hand of the diligent maketh rich.

In the month of June 1642, he went up to London, and was chosen minister of St Bartholomew's behind the Exchange, and next year he was nominated a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He is marked in Neal's list, as giving constant attendance during the session. He was appointed one of the select committee for the examination and approbation of ministers who petitioned for livings which had been sequestered. He had a fair opportunity, in that famous Assembly, of displaying his eminent abilities, and extraordinary learning; and of both he gave good specimens. He was then not much above forty years of age; and yet he discovered a very extensive knowledge in divinity, in Oriental learning, and in church-government. He very often spake, when enquiries into the primitive constitution of the Christian church were under consideration; and also when places of the Holy Scriptures were produced to stand for proof of such points of doctrine or discipline as were under decision. He often gave very remarkable interpretations of controverted places; I say not whether he was right or wrong, leaving the reader to judge for himself.

When some divines in the Assembly were for gathered churches, consisting only of Saints, and produced for that purpose, Rev. xv. 3.—Thou King of Saints; Dr Seaman objected to it, because the reading was doubtful, some copies reading, Thou King of Ages, or Everlasting. And Lightfoot backed him, by shewing, that the Syriac and Arabic read to the same import, King of the World, or of Ages.—When a debate commenced respecting the persons who should read the Holy Scriptures in public, and some were for the pastors doing it themselves, and Gouge and Marshall seemed to be for some expert and sober persons of the laity, Lightfoot shewed at large, that none in the Jewish synagogue read the law and the prophets, but public officers, and of the Levitical order. He produced the following arguments for the support of his assertion: Their multitude of universities for the education of the Levites for such purposes, viz. forty-eight; and their curiosity, that not a tittle of the law should be mistaken by those persons who read it. But Mr Reyner urged, that the Levites were not types of the pastors, but the priests were. To this Lightfoot answered, that the Levites in the Temple were one thing, and in the Synagogues another; for though these at the Temple were servants to the priests, yet in their Synagogues they were their pastors.—When the bishops, who had been employed to ordain, were voted out of the House, and their jurisdiction laid aside, the Assembly brought in this position respecting Ordination, That in extraordinary cases, some things extraordinary may be done, until a settled order may be had. Lightfoot was of this mind, shewing, that even some positive laws of God gave place not only to necessity, but even to convenience; as the steps to Solomon's altar, and many candlesticks and tables in the Temple. But when as a proof of it, that place was produced, 2 Chron. xxix. 34, The priests were too few, so that they could not slay all the burnt-offerings; wherefore their brethren the Levites did help them till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves. And Bathurst spake to that place to prove it pregnant; and also out of Numb. xviii. 4, 5, 6. and Levit. i. would prove that the Levites had nothing to do in slaying the sacrifices. Lightfoot answered them, and so did Coleman and Selden, who declared the contrary. When voted, it was carried that it was a pregnant place; but Lightfoot gave his negative.—When some in the Assembly called in question the equality of Matthias with the rest of the apostles, because he was chosen by lot, and not immediately called by Christ, he answered, That the lot did argue his immediate call. Because the apostles could not ordain him for an apostle by imposition of their hands, but sought to the immediate imposition of Christ's hands by a lot.—A question arose in the Assembly, whether excommunication should be done in a Presbytery, or in the presence of the whole church. Some were for it done in the presence of the whole church, bringing as proof, 1 Cor. v. 4. —When ye are gathered together, &c. Lightfoot said, That the gathering together here respected the heart-burnings among them. That they triumphed one against another in the very act of the incestuous person; and, therefore, he commands them to convene, unite in affection, and agree among themselves. And after two or three debates upon the case of the incestuous person, Lightfoot said again, That this case of the Corinthians was such as cannot be among us; for they were hedged in with the heathen, and the apostle plainly tells, that there was an iniquity among them more than heathenish, v. 1. Therefore, if he would have the whole church to come together, and cast out this member, for the vindication of the whole church, it is a singular example, and cannot be paralleled among us.—Several members offered 1 Cor. v. 2. for excommunication, and for excluding from the communion; where direction is given that the incestuous person be taken away from among them. But Lightfoot's judgment was, that this place did not at all respect excommunication. The dispute continued the whole day. And when the place was carried for a proof of excommunication, he gave his denial. Nor did he relish Mat. xviii. 17. which was also brought for excommunication. He considered it as speaking of offence given from a member to his pastor.—That it spake of shaming an offender, and not of censuring. For that the two or three, ver. 16. not the church, had to do with the offender.—That the Heathen and Publicans had access to sacred things; but the Jews abhorred their civil society. And this was to be as an heathen man and a publican, to have no society with such: but to be as a publican included not excommunication. Again, after Herle and Reynolds had spoken for that passage as proving excommunication, he answered them, 1. with the question, Are the two or three here named witnesses, as they would have them? For it is plain, that these must be admonishers. 2. He shewed that the text and speech of our Saviour was upon occasion of the disciples quarrelling. Now how improper is it, when he is speaking of offence between brother and brother, to conclude what such an one shall be to the church, and not to the party offended?

When the dispute came on between the Independents and the other party respecting Congregations, whether there were more than one in a city, especially in Jerusalem? and Dr Temple doubted whether there were many fixed congregations in that city, and it seemed to him there were not; Lightfoot answered in several particulars. 1. That such a multitude of pastors as were there at Jerusalem could not suit with one congregation. 2. That there were divers languages, that understood not one another; therefore there could not be but divers congregations. 3. That one part of the church had deacons, the other not; therefore we must make a distinction of their congregations. 4. In Acts xii. 12, we are informed that Many were gathered together praying; and yet James and the brethren were not there.—Burroughs and Lightfoot had a controversy respecting the five thousand who were added to the church, Acts iv. whether they were new converts, which Lightfoot positively declared, and Burroughs denied. And when Lightfoot had done, Palmer supported him in that.—Lightfoot contended, in the Assembly, for general admission unto the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, explaining the institution of it from the passover, and using the following arguments in support of his opinion. 1. That though the law forbid the unclean to come to sacred things, yet it gave not power unto any person to repel those who offered themselves to come: nor find we any such example. 2. Circumcision was indifferently administered to all the seed of Abraham; and therefore all ought to be admitted unto the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. 3. Judas received that sacrament; and therefore the admission should be general. When an instance was produced against his opinion, in his first argument, in the repulsion of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. he replied, that Uzziah's repulsion was from office and place, and not from the use of holy things. And he added, Grant that the priest then did and might repel the unclean, yet the case was now different; for that uncleanness was external, and it might be known whether the persons were purified or not. But a minister cannot now so judge of a man's conscience; for though he were scandalous yesterday, yet his repentance may be unfeigned to-day, for aught he knows. When the Assembly opposed to his opinion, Mat. vii. 6. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you, he replied, That this was spoken respecting the safety of the apostles.—That the Jews themselves, who use this proverb, by dogs and swine understand the bitter enemies and persecutors of the truth. And so our Saviour hereby warrants his disciples, though they preach not to persecutors and enemies, lest it cost them their lives. Respecting Judas, it was urged against his opinion, That though Christ knew the heart, yet the villany of Judas was not known among the disciples. He replied, That Christ had publicly marked him out for a traitor before.

It was also argued, After the sop he went out. He replied, That was no passover nor sacrament, but before it. Upon this the contest became warm, for he seemed in that debate to oppose the whole Assembly. Liberty was publicly given to him and another member to dispute the matter respecting Judas; which they did at large, but in that debate we cannot farther follow them.

Our author being eminently distinguished in that venerable Assembly, by his learning and integrity, he was by them promoted to the church of Much Munden in Hartfordshire, about the end of the year 1643.

He was some times appointed to preach before the House of Commons. In a sermon, which he preached before them, at the public Fast, from Luke i. 17. he speaks very warmly against placing the Apocrypha, in the midst of the Bible, between the two Testaments. He says, "It is not a little to be admired, how this Apocrypha could ever get such place in the hearts, and in the Bibles of the primitive times, as to come to sit in the very centre of them both." He reckons that this might be partly accounted for, because both the Apocrypha, and the Old and New Testaments, came to the converted Gentiles from among the Jews. And because that the Jews alone, for a long time, had enjoyed the knowledge of divinity and religion among them, the converted Gentiles could not but highly esteem their writings. Thus the Apocrypha gained esteem among mankind, in primitive times. He also allows that the prevalence of superstition contributed much to retain the Apocrypha in our Bibles: many persons, without consideration, persisting in doing as their forefathers had done, and in retaining what they had retained. And after admitting, that while ignorance and superstition prevailed, and it became a religion to do as their forefathers had done, retaining the Apocrypha in the Bible might be accounted for, he expresses his great wonder, that the Reformed Churches should still continue to allow it a place in their Bibles, upon their having shaken off the yoke of superstition. He adds, "It is true indeed that they have refused these books out of the canon, but they have reserved them still in the Bible: as if God should have cast Adam out of the state of happiness, and yet have continued him in the place of happiness. Not to insist upon this, which is some digression, you know the counsel of Sarah concerning Ishmael, and in that she outstripped Abraham in the spirit of prophecy, Cast out the bond woman and her son; for the son of the bond woman may not be heir with the son of the free woman." He here calls the Apocrypha, "The wretched Apocrypha, and this patchery of human invention." In the same sermon, he says, That Christ and Antichrist are plainly the seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent. And that "he who will seek to make conjunction of Rome and us, will marry light and darkness, God and the Devil, Christ and Antichrist together, and make a friendship between those, between whom God himself hath doomed an enmity while the world endureth." At the conclusion of that sermon, he says, "Let scattered Popery never cloud us again, nor superstition overwhelm us. Let Religion and the Gospel be in all our borders, and peace and truth in all our times."—

In another sermon, which he preached before the House of Commons, from Rev. xx. 1, 2. he says, "It is a groundwork, necessary to be laid by him who will make any thing of the book of Daniel and of the Revelation; That where Daniel ends John begins, and goes no farther back, and where John begins Daniel ends, and goes no farther forward. For Daniel sheweth the state and the persecutors of the Church of the Jews, from the building of Jerusalem by Cyrus, to the destruction of it by Titus, and he goes no farther. And where the beloved prophet concludeth the beloved disciple begins, and shews the state and the persecutors of the Christian church, from the destruction of Jerusalem to the end of the world, and revealeth a new Jerusalem coming down from heaven when the old one on earth is destroyed, and one persecuting monarchy and state of Rome equalling in mischief and cruelty against the church all the four that had gone before it."—In the same sermon, he warmly recommended to the House, a Review and Survey of the Translation of the Bible. He said, "I hope you will find some time among your serious employments to think of a review and survey of the translation of the Bible; certainly that might be a work which would very well become a reformation, and which would very much redound to your honour. It was the course of Nehemiah, when he was reforming, that he caused the law not only to be read, and the sense given, but also caused the people to understand the reading, Neh. viii. 8. And certainly it would not be the least advantage that you might do to the three nations, if not the greatest, if they, by your care and means, might come to understand the proper and genuine reading of the Scripture, by an exact, vigorous, and lively, translation. I hope, (I say it again) you will find some time, to set a-foot so needful a work. And now you are about purging the Temple, you will look into the Oracle, if there be any thing amiss in that, and remove it."—He also earnestly recommended to the House, to take care that none intrude upon the ministry, or to preach the Gospel, who have not a call to that work, and some competent ability for it. He observed, "This is a main well-head from whence flow all the errors that are among us, when mechanics, unlettered and ignorant men will take upon them to be preachers, and to instruct others when they need teaching themselves; and this, if it be not stopped, will overflow all with a puddle of errors and heresy. You have made good orders for stopping and preventing this, but execution is all." He likewise recommended to them, a speedy and effectual settlement of the church; and he expressed his joy in seeing what they had done, in Platforming Classes and Presbyteries, which, says he, I verily and cordially believe is according to the Pattern in the Mount. In the same sermon, he spake very warmly, and with great energy, against the sin and folly of allowing an unrestrained liberty of conscience. He says, That error is more dangerous than open persecution; for persecution can only destroy the body, but error destroys both body and soul.—"And for Zion's sake, who can hold his peace? Souls lie a-bleeding by this, as well as bodies by the enemy. The church is undone by this, as the land by them. 'This spoils our truth, as they do our peace.' He adds, "There is great talk of, and pleading for liberty of conscience; that men may do in matters of Religion, as Israel is said to have done in the book of Judges, that which seemeth right in their own eyes.—I shall not determine the question, whether the conscience may be bound or not, though for mine own satisfaction I am resolved that it may." And he maintains, that it is a truer point in divinity, that an erring conscience may be bound, than to hold the contrary opinion. He adds, "But certainly the devil in the conscience may be, nay, he must be bound, or else you act not according to what Christ requireth at your hands. It is true indeed which is so much talked of, that Christ alone must reign in the conscience, but it is as true also, that he doth so, by the power that he hath put into the hands of the magistrate, as well as by his word and Spirit."

The learned Lightfoot became master of Katherine-hall, Cambridge, when Dr Spurstow was ejected from that place, for refusing the Engagement. Lightfoot is enrolled among the masters of Katherine-hall, in Dr Fuller's History of the University of Cambridge, page 83, and among the learned writers, page 84, where the author says, that he was an excellent linguist. He enjoyed that mastership, with the sequestered living of Much Munden, which was given him by the Assembly of Divines, till the Restoration, when he would have resigned it back into the hands of Dr Spurstow, but he declining it, Lightfoot conformed, and upon his application to the King was confirmed in both his preferments until his death. In 1652, he took the degree of Doctor in Divinity. His Latin discourse was from these words, If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha. When he was in the University, he preached frequently; and his discourses were highly useful to the students. He always warmly recommended unto them a blameless life, and diligence in their studies. He faithfully warned them to avoid enthusiasm, which at that time greatly prevailed in England.—In the year 1655, he was chosen Vice-chancellor of the University of Cambridge; and he most carefully discharged the duties of his office.—Beside his labours in the University and in the church, and writing many learned books, he also contributed to promote the elaborate works of other eminently learned men. He afforded considerable assistance to Dr Walton, who was afterward bishop of Chester, in his Biblia Polyglotta, or Polyglott Bible, which was printed at London, in 6 vols. folio, 1657. In that very elaborate work, the sacred text was, with peculiar care, printed, not only in the vulgar Latin, but also in the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldee, Samaritan, Arabic, Ethiopic, Persic, and Greek, languages, each having its peculiar Latin translation annexed to it; and an apparatus fitted for each, that those different tongues might be the better understood. We are informed, that our author was consulted by Dr Walton respecting the whole work, when he proposed to engage in it. Dr Lightfoot seems also to have assisted Dr Custell, Arabic Professor of Cambridge, in his Lexicon Heptaglotton, and the learned Poole, in his Synopsis Criticorum.

Dr Lightfoot maintained some peculiar sentiments.

1. That the Jews shall not be called, but are utterly rejected. And that the time of their rejection happened before the times of Christ; and was on account of their fond and impious traditions; rather than, as is commonly asserted, after Christ, for their wickedness in murdering their Messiah, and persecuting the Gospel. And that their last and only calling was in the times of Christ and his apostles; when some few of them, viz. A Remnant, were brought in to the faith of Christ. But that neither then there was, nor ever shall be, any universal calling of them. And that Rom. xi. 5. was very unfit to prove this calling of the Jews to be either universal, or after a great many ages.
2. That the Greek Translation of the Bible by the Seventy was hammered out by the Jews, with more caution than conscience, more craft than sincerity; and that it was done out of political ends to themselves.
3. That the Keys were given to Peter alone, as Christ spake only to him, Mat. xvi. 19. That is, to open the Gospel to the Gentiles; which was designed, he said, by the kingdom of heaven. And that it was to this purpose Peter spake, Acts xv. 7. This opinion he openly held in the Assembly of Divines. 4. He did not allow that Binding and Loosing related to discipline, but to doctrine. And that because the phrases, to bind and loose were Jewish, and most frequent in their writers; and that it belonged only to their teachers, to bind and to loose. And that when the Jews set any apart to be a preacher, they used these words, Take thou liberty to teach, what is bound, and what is loose. And we may here add, his peculiar interpretation of God's words to Cain, If thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door. Sin, that is not punishment, to take hold of thee, but a sin-offering, to make atonement for thee. And that, he said, was the common acceptance of the Hebrew word, which is rendered sin, in the books of Moses. And that God did not intend to terrify Cain by those words, but rather to keep him from despair.

Upon the restoration of King Charles the Second, it is said, that he was in danger of being deprived of his preferments, but by the good offices of Archbishop Sheldon, and others, he was not only confirmed in the possession of these, but was also presented, by the lord-keeper Bridgeman, to a prebendary's place in the cathedral of Ely. He died there of a fever, Dec. 6th, 1675. His remains were interred at Munden.

Some of Dr Lightfoot's writings were first published separately, in small pieces. His Miscellanies Christian and Judaical, and Others: Penned for Recreation at vacant hours. A small book, 203 pages. London, 1629. It was dedicated to Sir Rowland Cotton. The epistle dedicatory was dated at Hornsey, near London, March 5, 1629. In that epistle, he says, "My creeping and weak studies, neither able to go, nor to speak for themselves, do, like Pyrrhus in Plutarch, in silence crave your tuition.—Your encouragement and incitation did first set me forward to the culture of holy tongues, and here I offer you the first fruits of my barren harvest. Your tried learning and tried love assure me, that you can judge soundly, and yet will not judge too heavily of my weak endeavours; and such a patron my book desir-eth." He published that book, when he was about twenty-seven years of age; and, by the quotations in it, he appears to have studied and read to a very great extent.—His Harmony of the Old Testament was also first published separately. And his Harmony of the four Evangelists among themselves and with the Old Testament, Part 1st, from the beginning of the Gospel to the baptism of our Saviour. 4to. pp. 214. London, 1644.—Part 2d, 4to. pp. 136, from the baptism of our Saviour, to the first passover after. London, 1647.—Part 3d, from the first passover after our Saviour's baptism, to the second. 4to. pp. 295. London, 1650.—A Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles, chronical and critical, Part 1st, from v. 1, to the end of chap. 12th, with a brief survey of the contemporary story of the Jews and Romans. 4to. pp. 331. London, 1645.—And, The Harmony, Chronicle and Order, of the New Testament—The text of the four Evangelists methodized—The story of the Acts of the Apostles analized—The Order of the Epistles manifested—And the times of the Revelation observed. All illustrated, with variety of observations upon the chiefest difficulties Textual and Talmudical, for clearing of their sense and language. With an additional Discourse concerning the Fall of Jerusalem, and the condition of the Jews in that land afterward. This learned and elaborate work was published, in a small folio-form. pp. 195. London, 1655.—I have seen three sermons of his, before the House of Commons, Fast, which were published separately; one from Luke i. 17. 4to. pp. 50. Lond. 1643. Another from Rev. xx. 1, 2. 4to. pp. 31. Lond. 1645. And a third from Psalm iv. 4. 4to. pp. 35. Lond. 1647.—The Temple-service as it stood in the days of our Saviour. 4to. pp. 200. The Temple: especially as it stood in the days of our Saviour. 4to. pp. 286. Lond. 1650. Horae Hebraicae, &c. Leipsic, 1675.

His Works were published by Mr Strype, in two volumes folio. London, 1684. The first volume contains The Harmony of the Old and New Testaments—Observations on Genesis—A handful of Gleanings out of the book of Exodus—A Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles—The Temple-service—Miscellanies—The Temple described, with a map of it drawn by himself. The second volume contains, Horae Hebraicae, or Hebrew and Talmudical Exercitations, on the four Evangelists, the Acts of the Apostles, some chapters of the Epistle to the Romans, and on 1 Cor. translated into English, and published by Mr John Strype, with above forty Sermons, which were preached on several subjects and occasions, and a short tract on the fourth article of the Creed, never before published: All in English. And his Works were printed in Latin at Rotterdam, in 2 vols. folio, 1686. with a very beautiful frontispiece. And Mr Strype informs us, in his Preface to his Remains, that this learned man's usefulness has been so well known abroad, that there have been two or three impressions of his works there, since his death, the last of which was finished at Franeker, in the year 1698, with the addition of different tracts of his Remains. Remfertus, the Professor, and several learned men in that place, had earnestly desired to obtain every production of Dr Lightfoot's pen for publication, that no notions of so great a man might be lost. Some of his Genuine Remains were published by Mr Strype, London, 1700. Octavo, pp. 295.^a I have seen Dr Lightfoot's writings in different parts of Scotland, and in England.

JOHN DE LA MARCH.

JOHN DE LA MARCH was minister of the French Church. In the year 1643, he was appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and assisted his brethren in their arduous work in that Assembly. He was one of those divines who subscribed the proposition, "That Jesus Christ, as King of the Church, hath himself appointed a church-government, distinct from the civil magistrate." Lightfoot entered his dissent respecting that proposition, with whom very probably Mr Coleman would have joined, if he had not been seized with sickness at that juncture and died.* But many eminent divines readily subscribed it.—From what John de la March has published to the world, he appears to have been a considerable sufferer in the cause of Truth, and a very zealous covenanter and reformer. He has published a Treatise on Rev. xviii. 17. which is entitled, "A Complaint of the False Prophet's Mariners, upon the drying up of their Hierarchical Euphrates, as it was publicly preached, in the island of Guernsey, before a sett order of Ministers, expounding in their turns the Revelation of John." 4to. pp. 112. London, 1641. In this publication, the author speaks very warmly against the innovations, the usurpations, and tyrannical government of the prelates, with their attempts to introduce popery. He speaks against the government of the church by Archbishops, diocesean bishops, and all ecclesiastical officers depending on that hierarchy; and in favour of the Presbyterian form of church-government. In the last page of the book, he says, "But above all be careful to commend the rooting out to the very stumps, yea stumps and all of that hierarchical antichristian-like church-government, with all the officers thereof, to those who are now fighting the battles of the Lord; and, in place thereof, labour to have the holy church-discipline of Christ established, countenanced, and fully authorised among us; seeing that no man usurp, under what colour or title, how favourable and specious soever it be, any dominion over the Lord's inheritance."—A dedicatory epistle to the House of Commons, an Address to the faithful witness of Christ, Mr Henry Burton, and a short Preface, are prefixed to that Performance. In the Address to Mr Burton, the author says; "Worthy Sir, the first draught of this Treatise was conveyed unto you presently after the matter therein contained had been preached in our monthly Propositions, and public meetings duly observed among us, according to the order prescribed in our Discipline, not unknown unto you. The reason was because of the great interest you had therein, not only in regard of the spiritual brother-hood, and former acquaintance, but especially in respect of the subject thereof. You being one of the eminent witnesses of Christ, who had suffered for the testimony of his truth, according to the prophecy, Rev. xi. 7. &c. yet then lying unburied, in one of the public places of the great city, Castle-cornet in Guernsey, where some few years before two other brethren, and the author also, for a whole week of months had been unjustly imprisoned, and unlawfully detained for the same testimony."—Mr Henry Burton, B. D. to whom our author wrote that Address, was eminently courageous in the cause of truth, and a very great sufferer in the cause of non-conformity, under the iron rod of the English prelates. He felt the shocking cruelties of the ruling prelates in his time, and especially those of Laud, the arch-enemy of the Puritans. Mr Henry Burton, and Mr John de la March, seem to have been companions in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ.

^a Lightfoot's Life prefixed to his Works, both Latin and English, and the Preface to some of his Genuine Remains.

a Neal's Puritans, vol. iii. chap. vii.

This is all the account that I am able to give of Mr John de la March. The reader, who has an opportunity, may see an interesting account of his brother and companion in tribulation, Mr Henry Burton, in that excellent and seasonable work, Brook's Lives of the Puritans, vol. iii.

STEPHEN MARSHALL, B. D.

MINISTER OF FINCHINGFIELD IN ESSEX, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

STEPHEN MARSHALL was born at Godmanchester in Huntingdonshire, in England. He received his education in Emmanuel-college, Cambridge. Dr Fuller says, "Thence he went very early a Reaper in God's Harvest, yet not before he had well sharpened his sickle for that service." He was some time minister at Wethersfield in Essex, and afterward he became minister of Finchingfield, in the same county. He gained there a very high reputation. And Dr Fuller informs us, 'that after several years discontinuance, he came up to Cambridge, to take the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, where he performed his exercise with general applause.—It is said, that when he was at Finchingfield, he was silenced for non-conformity; and that he continued a considerable time under suspension. He was greatly despised and reproached by the opposite party; but he was a man of great worth, and was often called to preach before the Long Parliament, who consulted him in all affairs of importance respecting religion. Dr Fuller says, "No man was more gracious with the principal members. He was their trumpet, by whom they sounded their solemn Fasts, preaching more public sermons on that occasion, than any four of his function. In their sickness he was their confessor, in their assembly their counsellor, in their treaties their chaplain, in their disputations their champion." Clarendon says, "And without doubt, the Archbishop of Canterbury had never so great an influence upon the councils at court, as Mr Marshall and Dr Burgess had upon the Houses of Parliament." November 17, 1640, was observed as a day of solemn fasting by the House of Commons, at Margaret's church, Westminster, when these two eminent divines were appointed to conduct the public service of the day. On that solemn occasion, it is said, that they prayed and preached at least seven hours. Upon the important service being ended, the House voted thanks to both the preachers, desiring them to print their sermons; and for their encouragement in time to come, a piece of plate was, by order of the House, presented to each person.

Clarendon, with some other writers of a similar spirit, brings a very heavy charge against Mr Marshall; a charge which is indeed altogether unworthy of any honest man. It respects the ministers' petition which was presented to the Parliament for a reformation of certain grievances in the hierarchy in 1640, or 41. It follows: "The paper-which contained the ministers' petition was filled with very few hands, but many other sheets were annexed for the reception of numbers who gave credit to the undertaking. But when their names were subscribed, the petition itself was cut off, and a new one, of a very different nature, annexed to the long list of names; and when some of the ministers complained to Mr Marshall, with whom the petition was lodged, that they never saw the petition to which their names were annexed, but had signed another petition against the canons, Mr Marshall is said to have replied, that it was thought fit by those who understood the business better than they, that the latter petition should be preferred rather than the former." This is certainly a charge of a very high nature; and should have been well substantiated. Dr Walker, notwithstanding his extreme bigotry and enmity against the Puritans, seems not here to give full credit to the noble historian. After he has affirmed that the petition was only the contrivance of some few of the ministers in and about London, and probably of Mr Marshall in particular, he adds only, "that it is probable that Mr Marshall was deeply enough concerned in the affair." He clearly appears unwilling to affirm it as a matter of fact. If, however, the above account had been true, why did not the ministers complain to the Committee which was appointed by the house of Commons to inquire into their regular methods of procuring hands to petitions? The royal historian answers, that they were prevailed upon to sit still and pass it by; for the truth of which we have only his lordship's word, where we should have had reference to clear proof. It has also been observed here, that nothing of that kind appears in Rushworth, Whitlocke, or any other impartial writer of those times. The whole affair seems, therefore, to have the appearance of a mere forgery, designed to defame the memory of Mr Marshall and of the rest of the Puritans.

Wood says, that "upon the approach of the troublesome times in 1640, Mr Marshall, Mr Calamy, Dr Burgess, and some others, did first whisper in their conventicles, then openly preach, that for the cause of religion it was lawful for the subjects to take up arms against their lawful sovereign." The celebrated Dr Calamy says, "As to Mr Stephen Marshall, he was an active man, and did encourage the taking up arms for securing the constitution, when it appeared not only to him and his brethren, but to a number of as worthy gentlemen as ever sat in St. Stephen's chapel, to be in no small danger; but I am not aware that he can be justly charged with any concurrence in those things, which afterward overthrew the constitution, and tended to confusion. He wrote a defence of the side which he took in our civil broils, and I cannot hear that it was ever answered." ^a

Mr Marshall, at the same time, took a very active part in the controversy respecting church-government. He was one of the authors of Smectymnuus.^b The learned Dr Kippis says, "it was a production of no small importance in its day; and was drawn up in a style of composition superior to that of the Puritans in general, and, indeed, of many other writers at that period."

In the time of the civil war, Mr Marshall was appointed chaplain to the Earl of Essex's regiment in the Parliament's army. Dr Grey, in contempt, calls him and Dr Downing "the two famed casuistical divines, and most eminent camp chaplains;" and charges them on the authority of Clarendon and Echard, with publicly avowing, "that the soldiers lately taken prisoners at Brentford, and released by the king upon their oaths, that they would never again bear arms against him, were not obliged by that oath; but by their power they absolved them, and so engaged those miserable wretches in a second rebellion." This has the appearance of forgery, with a view to defame these eminent divines. Priestly absolution was exceedingly remote from their practice, and the object of their utmost abhorrence. Beside, the Parliament's army stood in so little need of these prisoners, who are said to have been only 150 men, that there is great reason to suspect the truth of the whole account.

^a Calamy's Contin. vol. ii. p. 737.

^b See the account of that famous piece, Life of Mr Calamy, vol. i. pp. 171, 172.

In the year 1643, Mr Marshall was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and was a most active and valuable member. He was one of those divines in that famous Assembly, who appeared for the institution of the ruling elders by divine right.^a He seems to have been employed in writing to foreign churches, for Mr Baillie says: "Our letter to foreign churches, formed by Mr Marshall, except some clauses belonging to us put in by Mr Henderson, is now turned into Latin by Mr Arrow-smith."^b In this very public office he could not expect to escape the bitter censures of the opposite party. One of them, speaking of him as a member of the Assembly, says, "He quickly grows to be master, and is so called by all. They sit, not to consult for the reformation of religion in things that are amiss, but to receive the Parliament's commands to undo and innovate religion. In which work, or rather drudgery of the devil, our active Stephen needs neither whip nor spur; tooth and nail he bends himself to the overthrow of the hierarchy, root and branch."

Mr Marshall and Mr Nye were sent, by order of the English Parliament, to attend the commissioners to Scotland, whose great object was to establish an agreement with the Scots, desiring their aid in the war, and some of their divines to join those at Westminster, for settling an uniformity of religion and church-government in both nations. The commissioners arrived at Edinburgh, Aug. 9th, 1643, and were favourably received by the Assembly, who proposed, as a preliminary, that the two nations should enter into a perpetual covenant for themselves and their posterity, that all things might be done in God's house according to his will. Having appointed some of their number to consult with the English commissioners respecting a proper form, they chose delegates for the Assembly at Westminster, and unanimously advised the Convention of States to assist the English Parliament in the war, chiefly because they apprehended that the war was for religion. The Committee for drawing up the solemn League and Covenant, delivered it into the Assembly, Aug. 17th, where it was read, and highly applauded, both by ministers and elders, none opposing it except the King's commissioner. It readily passed both the Assembly and Convention in one day, and was dispatched the next morning to Westminster, with a letter to the two Houses, wishing that it might be confirmed, and solemnly sworn, and subscribed in both kingdoms, as the surest and strictest obligation to make them stand and fall together in the noble cause of Religion and Liberty.—Messrs Marshall and Nye, in their letter to the Assembly at Westminster, under the date of Aug. 18th, 1643, assure their brethren, that the Scottish ministers were wholly on the side of the Parliament.* They conclude their valuable letter, in the following words: "We scarcely ever saw so much of Christ for us as this day, in the Assembly's carrying of this business, such weeping, such rejoicing, such resolution, such pathetical expressions, as we confess hath much refreshed our hearts, before extremely saddened with ill news from our dear country; and hath put us in good hope that this nation, which sets about this business, as becometh the work of God and saving of the kingdoms, shall be the means of lifting up distressed England and Ireland."

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 401.

^b Letters, vol. i. p. 414.

Mr Marshall frequently united with his brethren in the observance of public fasts, when the services were protracted to a great length. On one of these occasions, it is said, that Dr Twisse having commenced the service with a short prayer, "Mr Marshall prayed large two hours, most divinely confessing the sins of the members of the Assembly, in a wonderful, pathetick, and prudent way. After, Mr Arrowsmith preached an hour, then a psalm; after which, Mr Vines prayed nearly two hours, Mr Palmer preached an hour, and Mr Seaman prayed nearly two hours, then a psalm. Mr Henderson then spoke of the evils of the time, and how they were to be remedied, and Dr Twisse closed the service with a short prayer and blessing.”^a

* Neal's Hist. vol. iii. chap. ii. Baillie's Letters, vol. i. Letter xxxvi.

In the year 1644, Mr Marshall attended the commissioners of Parliament at the treaty of Uxbridge. In 1645, he was chosen one of the Committee of accommodation, to secure the peace of the church, and to promote, as far as possible, the satisfaction of all parties. The following year, he was appointed, together with Mr Joseph Caryl, chaplain to the commissioners who were sent to the king at Newcastle, in order to an accommodation for peace. Removing thence, by easy journies, to Holmby-house, in Northamptonshire, the two chaplains performed divine worship there; but his Majesty never attended. He spent his Lord's day in private; and though they waited at table, he would not so much as allow them to ask a blessing. Wood, who mentions this circumstance, relates the following curious anecdote:—“It is said that Marshall did, on a time, put himself more forward than was meet to say grace; and, while he was long in forming his chaps, as the manner was among the saints, and making ugly faces, his Majesty said grace himself, and was fallen to his meat, and had eaten up some part of his dinner, before Marshall had ended the blessing; but Caryl was not so imprudent.”^b

In the year 1647, Mr Marshall was appointed, together with Mr Vines, Mr Caryl, and Dr Seaman, to attend the commissioners at the treaty of the Isle of Wight, when he conducted himself with great ability and moderation. The house of Commons having now many important affairs under consideration, Mr Marshall and Mr Nye, by order of the House, Dec. 31, 1647, were desired to attend the next morning to pray with them, that they might enjoy the direction and blessing of God in their weighty consultations.

In the year 1654, when the Parliament voted a toleration of all who professed to hold the fundamentals of Christianity, Mr Marshall was appointed one of the committee of learned divines, to draw up a catalogue of fundamentals to be presented to the House. About the same time, he was chosen one of the triers. He was justly accounted a very useful as well as admired preacher. Lady Brown, wife to an eminent member of the Long Parliament, was once under great trouble of mind, respecting the salvation of her soul. For some time she refused to attend public worship, though it had formerly been her very great delight. She even asked what she should do there, and said it would only increase her damnation! In that dismal state of mind, she was persuaded, and almost forced into the coach to hear Mr Marshall. The sermon was so exactly suited to her case, and so powerfully applied to her disconsolate mind, that she received great satisfaction, was filled with hope of her salvation, and returned home in transports of holy joy.* He seems to have given great satisfaction, when he preached in Edinburgh. Mr Baillie says, in his letter above-mentioned: "On the Sabbath, before noon, in the New Church, we heard Mr Marshall preach with great contentment." His sermons which have been printed abound with striking comparisons, and pointed appeals to the hearers; and though they are not adapted to the taste of modern eloquence, it may be very easily seen how they might gain much admiration in those times.

^a Ballie's Letters, vol. ii. pp. 18, 19.

^b Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. ii. under Caryl.

Mr Marshall has suffered greatly in his name and reputation. Dr Heylin, with his usual modesty, calls him "the great bell-wether of the Presbyterians." Mr Echard, with his usual candour, denominates him "a famous incendiary, and assistant to the Parliamentarians." Newcourt calls him "The Geneva-Bull, and a factious and rebellious divine." And Wood styles him "a notorious independent, and the archflamen of the rebellious rout." The truth however is, that he never was an independent, but he both lived and died an avowed Presbyterian. And respecting his rebellion, what has been before observed will afford every impartial reader a sufficient refutation of that charge. Dr Fuller had a better opinion of him, and a Calamy's Contin. vol. i. pp. 466, 467.

has classed him among the learned writers of Emmanuel-college, Cambridge, and accounted him a minister well qualified for his work.

Although some persons have suspected him of deserting his Presbyterian principles; yet upon his death-bed he gave full satisfaction of the contrary. Echard says, "This great Shimei, being taken with a desperate sickness, departed the world mad and raving;"^a than which there never was a more unjust aspersion. He was, indeed, taken ill, and obliged to retire into the country for the benefit of the air, when the Oxford Mercury published to the world that he was distracted, and in his rage continually cried out, that he was damned for adhering to the Parliament in their war against the king. But he lived to refute that unjust calumny, and also published a treatise to prove the lawfulness of defensive war, in certain cases of extremity. Upon his retirement from the city, he spent his last two years at Ipswich. Mr Giles Firmin, minister in Shalford, who knew him in life, and attended him at his death, observes, in a preface to one of Mr Marshall's posthumous sermons, "That he left behind him few labourers like himself; that he was a Christian in practice as well as in profession; that he lived by faith, and died by faith, and was an example to the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in faith, and in purity. And when he, together with some other persons, conversed with him respecting his death, he said, "I cannot say, as one did, I have not so lived that I should now be afraid to die; but this I can say, I have so learned Christ, that I am not afraid to die." He enjoyed the full use of his understanding to the last; but, for some months previous to his death, he lost his appetite and the use of his hands. He died in the month of November, 1655, when his remains were interred with great funeral solemnity in Westminster-abbey, but were dug up, together with several others, at the restoration.^b The court and bishops were not content with their triumphs over the living Presbyterians, but they descended into the grave, and dug up the bodies of those who had been buried in Westminster-abbey in the late times. When the Emperor Charles the Fifth was at Wurtemberg in 1547, some of his officers desiring him to order the bones of Luther to be dug up and burnt, he most nobly told them, "I have now nothing further to do with Luther. He has henceforth another Judge, whose jurisdiction it is not lawful for me to usurp. Know that I make not war with the dead, but with the living who still continue to attack me." *

^a Echard's Hist. of Eng. vol. ii. p. 183.

^b Fuller's Worthies of Eng. fol. 1662. Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. edit. 2d. Neal's Hist. vol. iv. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

Mr Baxter, who was well acquainted with Mr Marshall, calls him "a sober and worthy man;" and used to observe, on account of his great moderation, that if all the bishops had been of the same spirit as Archbishop Usher, the independents like Mr Jeremiah Burroughs, and the Presbyterians like Mr Stephen Marshall, the divisions of the church would soon have been healed. Mr Marshall appeared and wrote with considerable ability against the Baptists, and published many sermons which were preached before the Parliament, the titles of some of which have been with diligent search collected for this work.

Mr Marshall's writings.—1. A Sermon preached from 2 Chron. xv. 2. before the honourable House of Commons, at their public Fast, Nov. 17, 1640. 4to. pp. 50. Lond. 1641—1645.—2. A Peace-offering to God; a Sermon preached from Psal. cxxiv. 6, 7, 8. to the honourable House of Commons, at their public Thanksgiving, for the peace concluded between England and Scotland, Sept. 1, 1641. 4to. pp. 51. Lond. 1641.—3. Merox Cursed; or, a Sermon preached from Judges v. 23. to the honourable House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, Feb. 23, 1641. 4to. pp. 54. London, 1641.—4. Reformation and Desolation; or, a Sermon tending to the Discovery of the Symptoms of a People to whom God will by no means be reconciled, preached from 2 Kings xxiii. 25, 26.

before the Commons, at their public Fast, Dec. 22, 1641. London, 1642.—5. The Song of Moses the servant of God, and the Song of the Lamb, opened in a Sermon preached from Rev. xv. 3, 4. to the honourable House of Commons, at their solemn Thanksgiving, June 15, 1643, for the discovery of a dangerous, desperate, and bloody, design, tending to the utter subversion of the Parliament, and of the famous city of London. 4to. pp. 48. Lond. 1643.—6. A Copy of a Letter written by Mr Stephen Marshall to a Friend of his in the city, for the necessary Vindication of himself and of his Ministry, against that altogether groundless, most unjust, and ungodly Aspersions cast upon him by certain Malignants in the city. 4to. pp. 30. London, 1643.—7. The Church's Lamentation for the Good Man's Loss; delivered in a Sermon from Micah vii. 1, 2. to the Right honourable the two Houses of Parliament and the reverend Assembly of Divines, at the Funeral of that excellent Man, John Pym, Esquire, a late Member of the honourable House of Commons, on the 15th of Dec. 1643. 4to. London, 1644.—8. A Sacred Panegyrick; or, a Sermon of Thanksgiving, preached from 1 Chron. xii. 38, 39, 40. to the two Houses of Parliament, his Excellency the Earl of Essex, the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, and common Council of London, the reverend Assembly of Divines, and Commissioners from the Church of Scotland. 4to. pp. 32. London, 1644.—9. A Divine Project to save a Kingdom, opened in a Sermon from Numb. xxv. 10, 11. to the Right honourable the Lord Mayor, and Court of Aldermen, of the city of London, at their anniversary meeting, April 22, 1644. 4to. pp. 44. Lond. 1644.—10. A Sermon of the Baptizing of Infants, preached from 1 Pet. iii. 21. in Abbey-church, Westminster, at the Morning Lecture appointed by the House of Commons. 4to. London, 1644–1645, pp. 61.—11. God's Master-Piece; a Sermon from Psal. cii. 16. tending to manifest God's glorious appearing in the Building up of Zion, preached before the Right honourable the House of Peers, March 26, 1645. 4to. 1645.—12. The Strong Helper; or, the Interest and Power of the Prayers of the Destitute, for the Building up of Zion, opened in a Sermon from Psal. cii. 17. before the Commons, monthly Fast, April 30, 1645. 4to. 1645.—13. A Sacred-Record to be made of God's Mercies to Zion: a Thanksgiving Sermon preached from Psal. cii. 18. to the two Houses of Parliament, the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, and common Council of the city of London, at Christ's church, June 19, 1645.—1645.—14. A Defence of Infant-Baptism: In Answer to two Treatises, and an Appendix, published by Mr John Tombes. In this treatise, the controversy is fully discussed. The ancient and generally received use of infant-baptism, from the days of the apostles of Christ, until the Anabaptists sprung up in Germany, is manifested; and the arguments for it from the Holy Scriptures maintained, and the objections against it answered. This learned and elaborate piece was dedicated, under the date of April 2, 1646, to the reverend Assembly of Divines and Commissioners of the Church of Scotland, then sitting at Westminster. 4to. pp. 256, Lond. 1646.—15. A Two-edged Sword out of the mouth of Babes, to execute vengeance upon the enemy and avenger; a Sermon from Psal. viii. 2. before the Lords at Westminster, monthly Fast, 28th Oct. 1646. 4to. London, 1646.—16. The Right Understanding of the Times; a Sermon before the Commons, Dec. 30, 1646, Fast, from 1 Chron. xii. 32. 4to. pp. 46. London, 1647.—17. A Thanksgiving Sermon from Joshua xxii. 33. preached to the two Houses of Parliament, in the Abbey church, Westminster, 12th Aug. 1647. 4to. London, 1647.—18. A Sermon preached from Rom. xii. 4, 5. to the Right honourable the Lord Mayor, and Court of Aldermen of the city of London, at their anniversary meeting, April 1652, wherein the Unity of the Saints with Christ the Head, and especially with the Church the Body, with the duties thence arising, are endeavoured to be cleared. 4to. Lon. 1652. The second impression, 1653. It is said that he has sermons from Isai. viii. 9. Zech. vii. 12. & Mat. xi. 12. but I have not seen these. I have seen, "The Power of the Civil Magistrate, in matters of Religion, vindicated; and the extent of his power determined, in a Sermon preached before the Parliament, on a monthly Fast-day," by Mr Marshall, and published by Mr Firmin, London, 1657.

JOHN MAYNARD, A.M.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT MAYFIELD, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JOHN MAYNARD was born of a genteel family in Sussex, at, or near, Riverfield, in England. He became a commoner of Queen's-college, Oxford, in the beginning of the year 1616, compounded for the degree of bachelor of arts as a member of that House, and afterward translated himself to Magdalen-hall, in the same University. In the year 1622, he took the degree of master of arts, entered into the holy ministry, and at length was settled at Mayfield, in his own country. Upon the commencement of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, openly avowed his sentiments, was appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, took the Covenant, and preached sometimes before the members of Parliament. In 1654, he was appointed one of the assistants to the commissioners of Sussex, for the ejection of ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters. A Mr Elias Paul d'Aranda was sometime assistant to Mr Maynard, who was so generous as to allow him all the tithe, reserving to himself the parsonage-house only, and the glebe. Mr Maynard was ejected from Mayfield, by the Act of Uniformity. After his ejection, he lived in that town, and was generally respected. He was a considerable benefactor to Magdalen-hall, where he received part of his education. Mr Peek, who succeeded him, was fixed on by the patron, with his approbation. He died June 7th, 1665. His remains were interred in the church-yard of Mayfield, where he has a tomb-stone, with the following inscription: Thus translated. "Sacred to the Memory of the very Reverend John Maynard, of Queen's-college, Oxford, M. A. He was endowed with a penetrating genius; well skilled in History; a divine of irreproachable manners, and of the most venerable gravity, very pious and learned, and a good public speaker. He shone during the space of forty years the light and glory of his flock at Mayfield (by so much the more happy or unhappy.) At length weary of this world, and ripe for heaven, he departed hence that he might enjoy Christ for ever and ever, June 7th, 1665. He fixed on this spot as the depository of his mortal part."

Mr Maynard's writings.—1. A Sermon before the House of Commons at their solemn Fast, from Prov. xxiii. 23. Feb. 26, 1644. 4to. London, 1645.—2. A Shadow of the Victory of Christ; a Sermon from Phil. iii. 21. before the House of Commons, at Westminster, at their solemn Fast, 28th Oct. 1646. 4to. London, 1646.—3. The Young Man's Remembrancer, and Old Man's Monitor, 1660.—4. The Law of God ratified by the Gospel of Christ; or, the Harmony of the Doctrine of Faith with the Law of Righteousness, wherein many of the types and rites of the Ceremonial law are unfolded, in several sermons, London, 1674.—5. The Beauty and Order of the Creation Displayed in the six days' work.*

WILLIAM MEWE, B. D.

WILLIAM MEWE was Rector of Essington, or, Eastington, in the county of Gloucester, in England, and one of the members of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He is marked in Mr Neal's list as giving constant attendance during the Session. He preached a Sermon at Westminster from Isai. xlii. 24, 25. before the honourable

* Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. Calamy's Account, vol. ii. Cont. vol. ii.

House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, Nov. 29, 1643. This Sermon is entitled, "The Robbing and Spoiling of Jacob and Israel." 4to. pp. 48. London, 1643. He has an epistle which is addressed to the House of Commons, and is prefixed to that sermon, dated Chancery-lane, 19th Dec. 1643. I am not able to give any farther account of Mr Mewe.

THOMAS MICKLETHWAIT.

THOMAS MICKLETHWAIT was a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is marked in Mr Neal's list as constantly attending. He was Minister at Cherryburton in Yorkshire. From that place he was called to sit in the Assembly of Divines at Westminster; and from thence he was cast out by the Act of Uniformity. He was father to Sir John Micklethwait, the celebrated physician. John Micklethwait, the son, had taken the degree of doctor of physic, at Padua in Italy, in 1638, was one of the college of physicians, and president thereof, physician in ordinary to King Charles II. from whom he received the honour of knighthood. And Dr Calamy says "the father was no less famous in the country, for his piety, gravity, prudence, and learning, in his profession of divinity, than his son was at London for his skill in the art of medicine." I have neither seen any writings by Mr Micklethwait, nor found any more information respecting him, in all my researches.

a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. Calamy's Account, vol. ii. Cont. vol. ii.

MATTHEW NEWCOMEN, M. A.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT DEDHAM IN ESSEX, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

MATTHEW NEWCOMEN received his education in St John's college, in Cambridge. He was very highly esteemed there, and eminently distinguished by his wit and his curious parts; which, being afterward sanctified by the power of divine grace, rendered him peculiarly serviceable to the church of God. He succeeded the famous Mr John Rogers at Dedham. Their gifts were very different. Mr Rogers was a grave, severe, and solid, divine. His great gift lay in the delivery of the solid matter which he had prepared with a peculiar gesture and elocution, so that few persons heard him without trembling at the word of God. He was indeed one of the most awakening preachers of the age. But Mr Newcomen's gifts lay almost every way. And his greatest enemies must allow, that he shewed as much art as piety in his sermons and prayers, and in all his religious services. Dr Collins, in his preface to Mr Fairfax's sermon which he preached upon the occasion of his death, gives the following account of him. He says, "That he had thirty years acquaintance with him, and in that time had been well acquainted with many learned and pious persons; but that he never knew any who excelled him, considering him as a minister in the pulpit, a disputant in the schools, and a desirable companion. In the first capacity, his gift in prayer was incomparable. He was a solid, painful, pathetick, and perswasive, preacher." He was a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and constantly attended during the session. And he then preached with Mr Calamy at Aldermanbury. He was employed together with Dr Arrowsmith and Dr Tuckney in drawing up that admirable piece, the Assembly's Catechism. He was also one of the commissioners at the Savoy. His management of the argument against the Toleration of the Jews, though never printed, made him to be admired by all persons who heard it. He had both many and great offers of preferment, after he was settled at Dedham; but he refused all these offers, and continued there until he was turned out by the Act of Uniformity, in the year 1662. Soon after he was ejected, he was invited to the pastoral charge of the English Church at Leyden in Holland. He accepted that charge more readily, because he knew that he should there have the full liberty of his public ministry, which he preferred to any thing in this world. He was there exceedingly acceptable to Dr Hoornbeck, and the other professors and learned men of those parts. And there he died of a fever, which prevailed much in that city, in the year 1668, or 1669. He was a most accomplished Scholar and Christian. He was eminently distinguished by his universal learning and piety, and by his extraordinary humility and pleasant conversation.* Mr Baxter, in his own life, frequently mentions Mr Newcomen with great respect, as one of the principal ministers concerned in the transactions of those times.

Mr Newcomen's writings.—Irenicum, a work much commended; but I have not seen it.—A Sermon preached from Neh. iv. 11. before the honourable House of Commons, Nov. 5, 1642. 4to. pp. 48. Lond. 1643.—A Sermon preached from Isai. lxii. 6, 7. before both Houses of Parliament, and the Assembly of Divines, at their solemn Fast, July 7th, 1643. 4to. pp. 34. London, 1643.—A Sermon tending to set forth the Right Use of the Disasters that befall our Armies, from Joshua vii. 10, 11. preached before both Houses of Parliament, at their extraordinary Fast, Sept. 12th, 1644. 4to. pp. 41. London, 1644.—The All-Seeing Unseen Eye of God; a Sermon from Heb. iv. 13. before the Commons, Fast, Dec. 30th, 1646. 4to. Lond. 1647.—The Duty of Such as would Walk worthy of the Gos- pel, to endeavour Union, not Division, nor Toleration; opened in a Sermon from Phil. i. 27. at Paul's, upon the Lord's day, 8th Feb. 1646-47. 4to. Lond. 1646-47.—A Sermon at the Funeral of Mr Samuel Collins, Pastor of Braintree in Essex, 1657.—A Farewell Sermon in the London Collection, from Rev. iii. 8.—Another Sermon in the Country Collection, which is the last in the volume, from Acts xx. 32. entitled, Ultimum Vale; or, The last Farewell of a Minister of the Gospel to a beloved people. It consists of 78 pages. Lond. 1663.—The Best Acquaintance, and Highest Honour of Christians. A Discourse on Job xxii. 21. A small book; but a great treasure. London, 1668 & 1679.

PHILIP NYE, M. A.

MINISTER OF KIMBOLTON, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

PHILIP NYE was born of a genteel family in Sussex in England, in the year 1596. He entered a commoner of Brazen-nose college, Oxford, 21st of July, 1615. He did not continue long there, but removed to Magdalen-hall, in the same University, where, being put under the care of a Puritanical tutor, he remained until he had taken the degrees in arts. He was a very diligent student, while he continued at Oxford. In due time, he entered into the holy ministry, and officiated sometime at Michael's church, in Cornhill, London, where he was in the year 1630.

In the year 1683, upon the death of Archbishop Abbot, Laud was made Archbishop of Canterbury; when he and his brethren renewed their blind zeal in the violent persecution of the Puritans. Many lecturers were silenced, and their lectures put down. The most eminent divines were often silenced, driven from place to place, and some of them were driven out of the country. Mr Nye, and others, to escape the fury of the storm, fled to Holland. He crossed the seas, that he might avoid the severe censures of the Episcopal inquisitions, and be free from impositions, with which he was much dissatisfied. Wood says, that there he continued for the most part at Arnheim in Guelderland. He returned to England about the beginning of the Long Parliament, and, by the favour of the Earl of Manchester, he became minister of Kimbolton in Huntingdonshire. In the year 1643, he was appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, sitting in which he had the rectory of Acton near London conferred upon him. He was one of the dissenting brethren in that Assembly. Mr Baillie says, speaking of Mr Nye, "When it came to his turn in the Assembly to oppose the presbytery, he had, from Mat. xviii. drawn in a crooked unformal way, which he never could get in a syllogism, the inconsistency of a presbytery with a civil state. In this he was cried down as impertinent. The day following, when he saw the Assembly full of the prime nobles and chief members of both Houses, he entered on that argument again, and very boldly offered to demonstrate, that our way of drawing a whole kingdom under one national assembly, is formidable; yea, thrice pernicious to civil states and kingdoms. All cried him down, and some would have had him expelled the Assembly as seditious. Mr Henderson shewed, that he spake against the government of our's, and all the Reformed churches, as Lucian and the Pagans were wont to stir up princes and states against the Christian religion. We were all highly offended with him. The Assembly voted him to have spoken against the order; which was the highest of their censures. Maitland was absent; but enraged when he heard of it. We had many consultations what to do: at last, we were resolved to pursue it no farther, only we would not meet with him, except he acknowledged his fault. The Independents were resolute not to meet without him, and he was resolute to recal nothing of the substance of what he had said. At last, we were intreated by our friends, to shuffle it over the best way might be, and to go on in our business. God, who brings good out of evil, made that miscarriage of Nye a mean to do him some good; for, ever since, we find him, in all things, the most accommodating man in the company.”^a

When Mr Baillie is speaking respecting the Independents having the communion every Sabbath, without any preparation before, or thanksgiving after; little examination of the people, and the like, he adds: “Mr Nye told us his private judgement was, that in preaching he thinks the minister should be covered, and the people uncovered; but in the sacrament, the minister should be uncovered, as a servant, and the guests all covered.”^b Mr Baillie also says, “As for the Assembly, these three weeks, Mr Nye, and his good friend Mr Herle, has kept us on one point of our directory alone, the recommending of the communicants coming up to the table to communicate. Their way of communicating, of some at the table, and some about it, without any succession of companies to more tables, is that whereon we stick, and are like to stick longer.”^c

In 1643, Mr Nye and Mr Stephen Marshall were sent with the commissioners who went from the English Parliament into Scotland, in order to obtain and establish an agreement with the Scottish nation, and to desire their assistance. The reader may see more respecting that important business, in the Life of Mr Marshall.—Mr Huine says, in his history of England, chap. lvii, 1463, “That Marshall and Nye were two clergymen of signal authority.”—Mr Nye was exceedingly zealous and active in promoting, and in recommending, the Solemn League and Covenant. He delivered an excellent speech, before the subscribing of that covenant, to the honourable House of Commons, and to the reverend Divines of the Assembly, at Margaret’s, Westminster, 25th of Sept. 1643. This speech was published by special order of the House of Commons, and has been repeatedly printed. He was one of the chaplains who attended the commissioners, who went from the Parliament to King Charles I. into the isle of Wight, in the year 1647.

^a Baillie’s Letters, vol. i. p. 437.

^b Letters, vol. i. p. 440.

^c Letters, vol. ii. p. 33.

In the year 1653, he was appointed one of the Triers of ministers. In the year 1654, when the Parliament voted a toleration of all who professed to hold the fundamentals of Christianity, Mr Nye was appointed one of the committee of learned divines, to draw up a catalogue of the fundamentals to be presented to the House; and he acted in that business. He was also constituted an assistant to the commissioners of London for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters. He was a principal man in managing the meeting of the congregational churches at the Savoy by the Protector's order, where the Declaration of the Faith and Order and Practice in the congregational churches in England was agreed upon, by their elders and commissioners, Oct. 12, 1658. This Declaration was printed, 1659, and in the following year was translated into Latin by Professor Hornbeck, and published at the end of his Epistola ad Duraem de Independentismo. There was scarcely a book upon the disciplinarian controversy, which Mr Nye had not looked into; as may be seen by his little book which is entitled, Beams of former Light, &c. Soon after the restoration of King Charles II. there was an order of Parliament for lodging his papers with the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth, where these are said to have remained a considerable time. He was a great politician; and it was debated in council after the King's restoration, for several hours, whether he should be excepted for life, because he had acted highly against the King, and had been a particular instrument in bringing all things into confusion. The result was, "That if Philip Nye should after the first of September, in the same year, accept or exercise any office, ecclesiastical, civil, or military, he should to all intents and purposes in law stand as if he had been totally excepted for life." He was ejected from Bartholomew behind the Exchange, London, and lived and preached privately as opportunity offered, to a congregation of dissenters. He died in the parish of Michael, Cornhill, or near it, in London, in the month of September, in the year 1672, when he was about seventy-six years of age. His remains were buried in Michael's church, Cornhill. He left behind him the character of a man of uncommon depth, and one who was seldom if ever out-reached. Dr Calamy says, that he had a complete History of the Old Puritan Dissenters in manuscript, which was burned at Alderman Clarkson's, in the fire of London.*

Mr Nye's writings.—1. A Letter from Scotland to his Brethren in England concerning the Success of Affairs there. 4to. London, 1643. Stephen Marshall's name is also subscribed to that Letter.—2. An Exhortation to the taking of the Solemn League and Covenant, for Reformation and Defence of Religion. London, 1643, and there again once or twice.—3. The Excellency and Lawfulness of the Solemn League and Covenant, in a speech to the House of Commons, and to the reverend Assembly of ministers, 25th Sept. 1643. 4to. 2d edit. Lond. 1660. In a collection of Sermons and Speeches, at taking the Covenant, Glasgow, 1741 & 1799.—4. An Apologetical Narration submitted to the honourable Houses of Parliament. 4to. London, 1643. He was assisted in this by Goodwin, and others.—5. An Epistolary Discourse about Toleration. 4to. London, 1644. In this Discourse, Thomas Goodwin and Samuel Hartlib are joined with him.—6. The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and Power thereof, according to the Word of God, &c. Lond. 1644. 2d edition. Wood says, Thomas Goodwin had also a hand in this book.—7. Mr Anthony Sadler examined.—8. The Principles of Faith, presented by Thomas Goodwin, Philip Nye, &c. to the committee of Parliament for Religion, by way of explanation to the Proposals for propagating the Gospel. 4to. Lond. 1654.—9. Beams of former Light, discovering how evil it is to impose doubtful and disputed Forms for Practices upon Ministers, especially under the penalty of ejection for non-conformity unto the same. 4to. Lond. 1660.—10. Case of great and present use, &c. 1677.—11. The Lawfulness of the

* Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. edit. 2d. Calamy's Account, vol. ii. Cont. vol. i. p. 28. and Neal's Puritans, vol. iv.

Oath of Supremacy, and Power of the King in Ecclesiastical Affairs, with Queen Elizabeth's admonition, &c. 4to. Lond. 1683. It was then reprinted, and in 1687 being printed again, it was dedicated by Henry Nye, the author's son, to King Charles II.—12. A Vindication of Dissenters; Proving that their particular Congregations are not inconsistent with the King's Supremacy in Ecclesiastical Affairs—1683.—13. Some Account of the Nature, Constitution, and Power of Ecclesiastical Courts: Printed with the former.—14. The Lawfulness of hearing the Public Ministers of the Church of England. 4to. Lond. 1683.—He has also a Sermon extant, which was preached from Neh. vi. 11. to the honourable Citizens of London, 29th Sept. 1659, being the day of the election of their Lord Mayor. 4to. pp. 29. London, 1661.

HENRY PAINTER, B. D. OF EXETER,

AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HENRY PAINTER of Exeter was bachelor in divinity. When an ordinance passed both Houses of the English Parliament for calling an Assembly of pious and learned divines, with a view to settle the doctrine, worship, government, and discipline, of the church, Mr Henry Painter was chosen one of that venerable Assembly, which met at Westminster, in 1643; and he did sit in that Assembly with his brethren, according to the list of those divines which has been transmitted unto us. But in all my researches among the writings of those times, I have not yet found any more particular account of Mr Painter. He might probably have his education in the University of Cambridge, as he is not mentioned in Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses. Nor have I found his name among those divines who preached before the Parliament.

HERBERT PALMER, B. D.

PASTOR OF ASHWELL, IN HARTFORDSHIRE, A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER, AND MASTER OF QUEEN'S-COLLEGE IN CAMBRIDGE.

HERBERT PALMER was born at Wingham, in the county of Kent, in England, and baptized there on the 29th of March, in the year 1601. He was descended from an ancient and respectable family of that name, which was related to several other notable families, both of the gentry and nobility. His father was Sir Thomas Palmer of Wingham, above-mentioned, and his mother was the eldest daughter of Herbert Pelham of Sussex, Esq.

The subject of this memoir had a polite and religious education in his father's house, when he was very young. His parents carefully trained him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and also exerted themselves to improve his intellectual powers in the rudiments of learning. Their instructions were very successful. He learned the French language almost as soon as he could speak. The progress of his opening mind was very remarkable and pleasant. It was soon adorned, both with the precepts of piety and with the principles of literature. Being early impressed with religious thoughts, he applied unto his mother for information respecting God, when he was about four or five years of age. From his childhood, he was well acquainted with the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All other knowledge is but trifling, when compared with the knowledge of the important truths of Divine Revelation. He read these with great delight, and committed portions of them to his memory, which he accounted a very pleasant task. By persevering in these exercises, he soon acquired an accurate knowledge of the Sacred Writings, which was highly beneficial to him afterward. And this most useful knowledge, formed his taste, enlarged and elevated his mind, and afforded him the noblest views of God, and of divine things, at the present time. The pious parents persevered in their duty. Many inconsiderately imagine, that parents are free from that carefulness and authority which are indispensably necessary, when the blooming youth goes out from the nursery. But it is then that the carefulness and authority of the parents ought to be particularly manifested, in training up their children in the way in which they should go. The youthful mind cannot be too early circumscribed by the judicious limits and restrictions of parental discrimination and appointment, and while the preceptive part of education is laudably dictated, example should conspicuously shine to establish and enforce its salutary tendency and effects, to allure the observer to an imitation.^a The training of youth in a proper manner is, undoubtedly, a very difficult and labourious work. It requires great patience, much firmness of mind, and peculiar prudence, accompanied with pure and devout principles. But the benevolent exertions, and the laudable endeavours, of parents, in training up their children in the way in which they should go, shall not be in vain in the Lord. They shall be crowned with success. The salutary fruits have sometimes immediately appeared; but in other instances, not until a considerable time elapsed. See Prov. xxii. 6. And the supposition is entirely false, that the vigour and activity of youth will be blunted, and the temper soured, and become gloomy and austere, by being too early attentive to religious knowledge.^b Sin produces such dismal effects; but not the religion of Jesus, which has a very different tendency.

The illustrious subject of these pages appears to have been really sanctified from the womb, like that eminent and faithful servant of the Lord, Jeremiah. When our religious youth was asked what course of life he should pursue; whether he inclined to be a lawyer, a courtier, a country gentleman, or the like, he constantly replied, That he would be a Minister of Jesus Christ. When some of his friends suggested in order to try him effectually, and seemed to dissuade him, by telling him, that this was too mean an employment for a gentleman, and that the ministers of Jesus Christ were hated, despised, and accounted as the off-scouring of the world, and the like, he always replied, "It was no matter for that; for if the world hated him, yet God would love him." Persons, who have just conceptions of the excellency of Jesus Christ, of the goodness of his cause, and of the importance of his service, and who know, that they are the objects of his love, are inspired with a magnanimity and gladness of heart, which will make them undaunted, easy and happy, in the frightful prospect of the hatred of the world, and even under any persecutions from earth or from hell. What the friends of this pious youth suggested unto him, in his early years, afforded him a fair opportunity of counting the cost, before he actually engaged in Christ's public service. Christ warmly recommends this to all his ministers and followers, with the greatest candour. See Mat. x. 16—25. This devout youth deliberately counted the cost, before he publicly appeared in Christ's service; and he also attentively considered what support and comfort Christ had promised to his faithful servants, in their difficulties and sufferings, especially that they should be beloved by his Heavenly Father, who would always countenance and assist them. See John xiv. 23. When he looked seriously around him, he saw no interests, which he thought fit to prefer to the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. And he was very early dedicated to the honourable service of Jesus Christ: Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt.

^a The Instructor, No. 32. p. 250.

^b See The Instructor, as above.

His progress in his education was truly admirable. And while others, at vacant hours, pursued their sports and recreations, he constantly attended to his lesson.—

He had very just views of parental authority; and most readily obeyed his parents in the Lord, in his early years; and afterward warmly recommended this unto others.

When he was well instructed in grammar-learning, and in other necessary branches of education, he was admitted Fellow-commoner in St John's-college, in Cambridge, in the year 1615, when he was about fourteen years of age. Here he prosecuted his academical studies with great diligence: and the fervour of his spirit in serving the Lord was nothing abated. He took the degree of master of arts, in the year 1622. He was chosen fellow of Queen's-college in the University of Cambridge, in the year 1623. He was a gentleman, and had an estate of his own, beside his fellowship, which probably were sufficient for his external support; yet he cheerfully undertook the charge of many scholars, as this charge was considered to belong to the office. And having been accustomed to religious exercises, and to learning, from his early years, devotion and literature were now very conspicuous in him. And this eminent tutor combined a religious and learned education in his plan of instruction. He prayed fervently with and for those who were under his tuition in his chamber, and carefully instructed them in the principles of the Christian religion; and of genuine literature. He also warmly recommended to their attentive consideration the public exercises, which were required from them by the college. These divinely appointed means of carrying truth into the heart, and of improving the opening mind, in concurrence with the Divine Blessing, produced their appropriate fruit, and were highly beneficial to many. As this respectable teacher of youth was both very pious, and an accomplished scholar, he was peculiarly attentive to the eternal interests of his pupils, and also to their learning. Religion and learning ought always to be combined in the education of youth. And both the teacher and the scholar ought to pray fervently to God, that his blessing may accompany their instructions. Without the Divine Blessing, no instructions can be truly profitable to any person.

This celebrated tutor, while he was fellow of Queen's-college, was called and solemnly ordained to the sacred work of the Christian Ministry, to which he was entirely devoted from his childhood, in the year 1624. The Anointed Saviour was exceedingly precious to his soul, and, therefore, he solemnly devoted himself to preach to poor perishing sinners the unsearchable riches of Christ. Some have thought, that it is dangerous to encourage any one to think of devoting himself to the work of the Christian Ministry, until the Saviour has become precious to his soul, whatever his learning may be. "Those who are acquainted with Gospel Truth and believe it, will be able to conceive of reasons why danger is to be apprehended, in this quarter, without it being necessary that they should disrespect literary attainments. The plain Gospel has nothing in it pleasing to the natural man, and while persons are in this state the pride of learning only leads them to despise it. It is therefore a wise precaution, which congregational Churches have for some time used, not to encourage any one to think of devoting himself to the work of the Ministry, till the Saviour has become precious to his soul; and they have not been without frequent warnings that this precaution is not greater than is necessary." ^a To pay to learning as much respect as is really due to it, and no more, is highly interesting to the Religious World, but the task is very difficult. And any plan that confines the ministerial office to those who have made very considerable advances in learning, seems to be dangerous, as it is founded on a principle which, if it had been always admitted, would have excluded many valuable characters from public usefulness in the Christian church. These remarks are not designed as unfriendly to learning, but the contrary; and that learning may have as much respect paid to it as is really due, and no more; and chiefly, that the great beauty of the combination of real learning and of saving grace, in the Minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, may be clearly seen. God is especially jealous of the honours of his grace, and when learning tends to degrade these, it must become foolish.

^a The Instructor, No. 36. p. 286.

he might the better understand their spiritual condition. This genuine friend of godliness used all means to instruct persons in the righteous ways of the Lord. He visited them, even those of the meanest rank, as often as he could; and allowed them to apply unto him in their distress. He was an excellent casuist; and very helpful to many who came to him with distressed consciences. He was also very serviceable to many by his epistolary correspondence, being instrumental in promoting solid piety both in hearts and in families, in the neighbourhood of Canterbury. Mr Clarke, who wrote a large account of his life, says, That great numbers of his Christian letters were then to be seen.

This pious and benevolent preacher also contributed to the welfare of the French congregation in Canterbury. He could both converse and preach fluently in the French language. And at the request of their eldership, he preached twice to that congregation in the French language, on solemn days. His labours on these days were highly acceptable to his auditory, and very beneficial to many souls. An aged French lady was so struck with his small stature and child-like look, upon seeing him the first time when he was coming into the pulpit, that she said with a loud voice, Alas! what shall this child say to us? But upon hearing him pray and preach with great fervency, and with much spiritual vigour, she lifted up her hands toward heaven with admiration and joy, blessing God for what she had heard.^a We are told, That the Scythians, much impressed with the fame of Alexander, were astonished when they found him a little man.

Mr Palmer's success in his ministry was not without opposition. The Gospel of Christ has been very commonly opposed by wicked and unreasonable men: but when the arm of Jehovah is engaged on the side of those who are employed in preaching it, they may confidently defy the most formidable opposition. Greater is he who is with them, than all who can be against them. Almighty God can make the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder of this wrath he can easily restrain. He can make his grace sufficient for his servants, and readily supply all their wants, and confer upon them such honour and happiness as this world cannot purchase. Mr Palmer's piety, zeal and faithfulness, raised enemies against him in this place, among carnal, lukewarm, and Gallio-like, men, who cared for none of those things; and especially among the cathedralists. His high birth and powerful friends partly intimidated them; yet some of their leaders adventured to exhibit articles against him: but the goodness of his cause, and the solidity of his answers, under Divine Providence, brought him off, at this time. Nevertheless, his lecture in Canterbury was afterward put down with the rest of the Afternoon-sermons, which greatly grieved his pious hearers. By the influence of several persons of great respectability, he was restored for sometime; but removed from Canterbury at last.

^a Clarke's Lives of eminent divines.

While he was there, his friends at court employed their influence, to have him made one of the prebendaries of Canterbury; but were not successful, for which he often thanked God. He afterward clearly saw, that by this disappointment, he was mercifully delivered from many temptations; for that company were afterward chiefly employed, by the succeeding archbishop, in promoting superstitious innovations. Religious characters sometimes have suffered considerable injury by a successful change in their circumstances; and disappointment has often proved highly beneficial to them.

The subject of this memoir removed to Ashwell, in Hertfordshire, in the year 1632. He was presented to the vicarage there by Laud, who, in his defence before the House of Peers, insisted upon this as one of his good deeds.^a Now, as formerly, he was indefatigably laborious, in discharging the duties of his office. He had just views of the importance of the pastoral charge, the great charge of immortal souls: and his care was chiefly exercised respecting the flock, over which the Holy Ghost had made him an overseer, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. He knew that the important work in which he was engaged was the Lord's, and he persevered in it with unshaken confidence, and with unimpaired vigour. He was now eminently distinguished, by his increasing diligence and disinterested zeal, in earnestly endeavouring to awaken the people in that place to attend unto the proper business of life, the salvation of their immortal souls; and to personal religion, and practical godliness, as expressions of gratitude for redeeming love, and evidences of union with Christ, and of progress in the ways of the Lord. He preached twice every Lord's-day, and frequently beside at other times, when he had opportunity. His heart glowed with a strong desire of promoting the spiritual and eternal interests of the people. He particularly studied plainness or simplicity, in his preaching; carefully condescending to the capacities of his hearers. He rather wished to edify them, than to discover his own learning; which he could easily have done. He accommodated his language and expression to the manners and habits of his auditory. The plainness of preaching was most beautifully and advantageously exemplified, in the public discourses of our Lord Jesus Christ. With many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it. He compared spiritual things with natural, intentionally alluding to those scenes of life and particular objects with which his hearers were best acquainted, in the respective places where he preached. By such means, these spiritual things are better understood, and make deeper impression on the mind of the serious and attentive hearer. And ministers of the Gospel, in their preaching and official duties, ought to follow the laudable example of our Lord Jesus Christ.

^a Clarke's Lives.

Our exemplary and edifying preacher was also highly useful to the people, in the time of their trouble. He pointedly availed himself of the advantages of sickness, or of any heavy affliction, that he might be instrumental in impressing their minds more effectually respecting their spiritual and eternal interests, when the Lord had softened their hearts, and opened their ears to receive instruction.

As their sympathising friend, he endeavoured to stir up their pure minds, by way of remembrance, "to review those precious sources of everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, which our Lord Jesus Christ, and God even our Father himself hath given us, that they might thankfully improve them, for establishment, growth, and comfort." From the same principles, he was favourable to funeral sermons, thinking that the minds of mankind, especially of those who were nearly related, might be advantageously impressed, by exhibiting suitable views of death, and of the eternal world, from appropriate texts of the Holy Scriptures, on such affecting occasions. —He also carefully catechised the people of his charge, both publicly and privately; instructing them in the principles of the Christian religion, especially those who were young and ignorant among them. And for their help and encouragement, he composed and published a Catechism, entitled "An endeavour of making the Principles of the Christian Religion plain and easy;" which was highly approved. His glowing piety, lively zeal, and ministerial faithfulness, also appeared in using all means to reduce disorderly persons into order. The evils which prevailed, as drunkenness, the profanation of the Lord's day, stealing, profane swearing, cursing, slander, whoredom, quarreling, disobedience to parents and superiors, were the subjects of his severest censures. And he repeatedly pressed and enjoined those duties which were either neglected or carelessly performed among the people, industriously promoting reformation in the place. He engaged some of his parishioners to concur with him in this arduous work, which they jointly carried on with great vigour and success, according to some excellent resolutions which they unanimously approved and subscribed. He accounted it his greatest honour and principal work to be instrumental in doing good to the souls of those who attended his ministry. He fully complied with the following admonition of a celebrated author to his younger brethren in the ministry. "I hope my younger brethren in the ministry will pardon me if I intreat their particular attention to this admonition, Not to give the main part of their time to the curiosities of learning, and only a few fragments of it to their great work, the cure of souls; lest they see cause in their last moments to adopt the words of dying Grotius, perhaps with much more propriety than he could use them: I have lost a life in busy trifling."^a He did not leave his people uninstructed; but was constant and zealous in this service of God, that they might be intimately acquainted with their Bibles, and with the method of salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ. "The divine who spends all his time in study and contemplations, on objects ever so sublime and glorious, while his people are left uninstructed, acts the same part the eagle would do, that should sit staring all day at the sun, while her young ones were starving in the nest."^b

Mr Palmer was truly and extensively charitable. God's goodness claims our particular attention. It is very conspicuous, and shines with peculiar lustre, both in his works and in his word. The Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works, Psal. cxlv. 9. And real Christians, who have the image of God restored to their souls, and the love of God shed abroad in their hearts, by the Holy Spirit given unto them, will natively imbibe, according to their limited capacities, the same benevolent and amiable dispositions which they behold and admire in God. The love of Christ constrains them not to live to themselves, but unto Him who died for them, and in doing good to his followers. Their faith works by love, and excites them to perform works of love. Agreeably to this, our author was peculiarly charitable and exemplary, especially in giving Bibles to the poor who could read, and money to those who could not read, to assist and encourage them in learning. He also contributed readily and largely to the other necessities of indigent persons. The commands of our blessed Lord and Saviour, the exhortations and examples of his apostles, and of the primitive Christians, and the nature of the holy calling of ministers of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God, all harmoniously unite their voice in saying, Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, do good to all, but especially unto those who are of the household of faith. The poor of this world, who are rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which God has promised to them who love Him, are members of that one glorious body, of which our blessed Lord, Jesus Christ, is the head, as well as the rich. When any member of our natural body suffers, we strenuously endeavour to relieve it. We ought to act in the same manner, respecting the members of Christ's mystical body. And, the gratuitous distribution of Bbles, among the poor, for the supply of their spiritual wants, is certainly highly commendable. We should also, undoubtedly, assist those persons who cannot read, in learning to read. Reading the Bible is necessary, in order that we may enjoy benefit by it, and comply with the authoritative command of our blessed Lord, Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life. And we should contribute also to the other necessities of poor persons, that they may comfortably enjoy the use of the Holy Scriptures, in imitation of Mr Palmer, and of other eminently pious persons, and above all of our blessed Lord and Saviour. And the proper maintenance of an able ministry, to enable persons the better to understand and apply the Bible, in which institution the poor should have gratuitously their share, ought not here to be overlooked.—How shall they hear without a preacher? And to the poor the Gospel is preached.

^a Proh! vitam pendidi, operose nihil agendo.

^b Christian Magazine, vol. vi. p. 366.

The order of Mr Palmer's family was very exemplary, like that both of a real Christian and of a faithful minister of the Gospel. His house was, in an eminent sense, a school of religion, where the best instructions for the advantage of souls were always enjoyed. He was peculiarly careful that none should be admitted into his family, but such persons as were either really godly, or at least willing to be instructed in the ways of God. He was constant in family-worship twice every day, not allowing any member of the family to be absent, when he read to them some portion both of the Old and New Testaments, and prayed with them. He also catechised his family twice every week, and likewise required from them some account of the sermons which were preached on the Lord's day, when he repeated these sermons to them, for their edification. He had firmly resolved, that he and his house would serve the Lord. Religion, in the power of it, will not be confined within the walls of the church, but will also appear and shine in the family and in the whole conversation. True religion will be family-religion. While he was at Ashwell, the sons of several respectable persons of the nobility and gentry desired to spend some time in his house, that they might have the benefit of his family-instructions and of his learned and pious conversation. He maintained in his house an assistant as a tutor to these young gentlemen. And he required of them the same account in catechising and repetitions as of his own servants. A chapter of the Holy Scriptures was also daily read by one of those gentlemen in course, after dinner and supper, and he whose turn it was to read, was also required to repeat from memory the substance of what he had read. By this practice, much useful knowledge was obtained. Mr Palmer afterward explained what appeared difficult, and made some observations from the most remarkable passages. Beside, he required that after every meal his servants should have some portion of Scripture read among them, or a part of some important religious treatise. He was peculiarly careful that all his family should remember the Sabbath-day, to keep it holy. He required them to cease from their work sooner the night before the Sabbath than on other nights, that they might be better disposed for the religious exercises of the following day. On that day, he called his family together, and engaged in prayer, reading the Holy Scriptures, and in singing psalms with them; and in due time, he carefully collected all his family to go with him to the solemn assembly, that they might be present at the whole of the public divine service. In the evening of the day, he required of all his servants, and of the young gentlemen who were in his house, an account of such portions of the Sacred Writings as had been read in public; and warmly exhorted them to meditate in private upon what they had heard in public. Neither family worship nor secret devotion were neglected. Mr Palmer allowed no food for the body to be prepared on the Lord's-day in his house, except what was necessary for a comfortable refreshment. No feasting on that day. If he had known, that any dish which was brought to the table had hindered any of his servants, in preparing it, from attending divine ordinances, he would not eat any part of that dish. He found very great delight in communion with God, and was much employed in secret prayer, both on the Lord's-day, and on other days. In that divine fellowship, he enjoyed a rich spiritual feast for his soul. He indeed walked with God. He scarcely ever entered upon any business, either by himself, or in company, without first asking counsel at the mouth of the Lord. He had a very quick and deep sense of his own failings seemingly, in the most minute instances. And though he walked very closely, yet he also walked very humbly, with his God, in a life of evangelical repentance and much self-denial. He often set days apart with a view to humble himself in secret, by solemn fasting and prayer, at the calls of Divine Providence. He also observed times of solemn thanksgiving for mercies received. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. He entered God's gates with thanksgiving, and his courts with praise. He served God with fastings and with prayers night and day. He was a very great admirer of the Holy Scriptures; and his accurate knowledge and readiness in these were very remarkable. Beside what he read and heard read in his family, he very frequently read by himself some part both of the Old and New Testaments, and wrote short meditations and observations on the passages which he thus read. Some hundred sheets of these meditations were left behind him. He could very readily quote chapter and verse of the Sacred Writings, in a great number of instances, with surprising exactness. He was a most careful observer of Divine Providence, and of its exact agreement with the Word of God.

During the year 1632, he was chosen one of the preachers to the University of Cambridge, by which, having proceeded bachelor of divinity about two years before, he had authority to preach as he should have occasion, in any part of England. In the year 1640, he and the celebrated Dr Tuckney were chosen clerks of the convocation for the diocese of Lincoln. Being now eminently distinguished by his learning and piety, he was, in the year 1643, appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and afterward one of their Assessors, in which place he behaved with great prudence and integrity. In that venerable Assembly, he was an illustrious and highly useful member. He was peculiarly distinguished by his excellent talents, and unwearied industry, and was very seldom absent, and never but upon urgent and unavoidable occasions. That public and honourable service of the church of Christ, which the members of that famous Assembly were employed in, was very delightful to him, and he was richly furnished for it. He had a quick apprehension, a very tenacious and vast memory, a solid and steady judgment, and a very ready elocution. In matters which required deliberation, he discovered much Christian prudence. In debates, whether respecting doctrine or discipline, he shewed very great sagacity in searching out the true sense of the Holy Scriptures, a clear understanding, and much strength of reason, in the accurate statement of questions for debate, in confirming the truth, and dissolving objections against it. In his judgment, he was for the Presbyterian form of church-government, the principles of which he well understood, and had great ability to defend. He was an eminent instrument in promoting that form of church-government. At first, indeed, he was much unsatisfied respecting the divine right of ruling elders, but by the learned debates in the Assembly, he received satisfaction on that subject; especially by the authority of 1 Cor. xii. 28, where government is attributed to a distinct rank of officers who are inferior to teachers, and of 1 Tim. v. 17, which implies, that there are other elders who rule well, beside those who labour in the word and doctrine. Mr Baillie, speaking of the dispute in that Assembly, respecting the divine right of ruling elders, says, "When all were tired, it came to the question. There was no doubt but we would have carried it by far most voices; yet because the opposites were men very considerable, above all gracious and learned little Palmer, we agreed upon a committee to satisfy, if it were possible, the dissenters." ^a It appears that the celebrated Mr Palmer, at last, received satisfaction respecting that matter.

Upon his being called to attend the Assembly of divines at Westminster, he was obliged to give up his ordinary residence at Ashwell, and could only make some occasional visits to that place. He was succeeded at Ashwell by the eminently pious Mr John Crow, who was afterward silenced, in the year 1662, as Dr Calamy informs us in his Account of the ejected ministers. Mr Palmer having tasted that the Lord was gracious, resolved to employ all his time and talents in the honourable work of the ministry, and in promoting the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. He accordingly preached when desired in different churches in and about London. But he was determined in his own mind, to accept the first invitation for the constant exercise of his ministry. And he readily accepted an invitation to Duke's-place, London, though the external support was small. But afterward, having received a very pressing invitation, he became pastor at New Church, Westminster. He was the first pastor of that church. He was succeeded at Duke's-place by Mr, afterward, Dr Thomas Young, an eminent and worthy divine. In each of these situations, Mr Palmer was highly esteemed, and his preaching, expounding, catechizing, and other ministerial labours, as formerly, were most abundant. He was always abounding in the work of the Lord. He was also one of those divines, who, by appointment of Parliament, carried on the morning lecture at the Abbey-church, Westminster. It is truly wonderful, that a person of such a weakly constitution could perform so much work. But as his day was, so was his strength. He continued frequently to speak in public for the space of six or eight hours on a Sabbath-day, beside spending a considerable time in more private exercises of prayer, repetition of sermons, pious exhortations, and the like, in the family. When his friends advised him to spare himself, suggesting that so much labour was hurtful to him, and beyond what his constitution admitted; he replied, "That his strength would spend of itself, though he did nothing; and it could not be better spent than in God's service." Having now obtained a very high reputation both for learning and piety, he was, on the 11th of April, in the year 1644, constituted Master of Queen's-college, in Cambridge, by the Earl of Manchester, who was at that time employed by an ordinance of Parliament, for the reformation of that University. In that place, he succeeded Dr Edward Martin, who was one of Archbishop Laud's chaplains, and a man of very high principles. Under the peculiar care and encouragement of the celebrated new master, the college flourished exceedingly, even to the great admiration of all persons. He laboured with indefatigable industry in promoting both religion and learning, in his college. He was exceedingly careful that no person should be admitted to a scholarship or fellowship, who was not both religious and learned; that the whole society should attend the public worship of God, and strictly observe the Lord's-day. He also closely attended to the instruction both of the young scholars, and of the college-servants, in the principles of religion. The exercises of common places, or sermons in the chapel, which had formerly been in use, only in term-time, he caused to be continued weekly all the year. And when he was present in the college, he frequently either preached himself, or expounded some part of the Holy Scriptures to them. He looked particularly into the several conversations of all persons. He required the constant performance of public exercises, by persons of all ranks. He used his utmost endeavours to have the college library furnished with good authors. He readily gave himself, and excited other persons to give, considerable sums of money for that purpose. And some dues, which were payable to the college, and had been formerly employed in feasting, were, by his means, converted to purchase valuable books for the library. He bestowed also a considerable part of his profits in that place, upon the yearly maintenance of poor scholars.—When any persons solicited him for preferment of their friends, he constantly replied, “That if they were found to deserve it better than others, they should have it; but if otherwise, they must expect to go without it.” And his actings were always exactly conformable to his words.—In his converse with the fellows of the college, he was peculiarly careful to preserve unanimity. His laudable exertions for the benefit of that college were, by the blessing of God, crowned with surprising success. And scarcely, perhaps, was ever any head of a society taken from them with more deep and general sorrow.—In the year 1645, he was appointed, by order of Parliament, one of the committee of accommodation. He was one of those divines who subscribed the proposition, “That Jesus Christ, as King of the church, has himself appointed a church-government distinct from the civil magistrate.”

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 401.

Mr Palmer always firmly adhered to his principles. Though he would very readily deny himself when only his own interest was concerned, he was constantly zealous and unmoved in whatever respected the glory of God and the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. Accordingly, upon his being called to preach at the Bishop of Lincoln's visitation, at Hitchin, he spoke with much faithfulness and freedom against the existing corruptions of the church, not fearing the consequences, though he was very sensible of his great danger. When the disgraceful Book of Sports, bowing to the altar, reading part of the service in the chancel, and other innovations, were enjoined, he firmly resolved rather to lose all, than offend God by encouraging superstition and profaneness. But the haughty prelates seem to have been more favourable to him than to some others. He constantly and vigorously opposed the superstitious and unrighteous oath of canonical obedience. He was always a most consistent and conscientious nonconformist.

This eminently learned and pious divine was several times called to preach before the Parliament, when he faithfully and plainly declared what God expected from them, and freely reprov'd what was amiss. He was accustomed to say, "that he did not in that place preach before them, as before a judge, but to them authoritatively, as by commission from God. And how much soever they might be superior to him in other respects, yet he was in that place superior to them, as acting in God's name; and therefore would not be afraid to speak, whatever was the will of God that he should tell them, notwithstanding any displeasure or danger which might by this means befall him for so doing." By his sermons before the Parliament, he has incurred the great displeasure and severe censure of some historians. But what such writers have advanced, evidently with a design to blacken the memory of one of the best of men, only requires to be fairly stated in the author's own words, that it may be completely refuted. And what these scurrilous writers have brought forth against that eminently learned and pious divine, will remain a stigma upon their own character, and a reproach to their memory, as long as men are disposed to read and to examine with candour the impartial records of history.

Mr Palmer was eminently distinguished for his temperance and sobriety. He abstained altogether from strong drink, and he drank wine very sparingly, and only when necessity required. He commonly eat only of one dish at a meal, and that was often not the most delicate. He scarcely used any recreation; but instead of that, he refreshed himself with the Christian conversation of his friends. He accounted time very precious.

His last sickness was not long, his constitution being weakly, and his natural strength much spent; but his behaviour was highly pleasing. His conversation was holy and heavenly. He lived piously, and died cheerfully, in the exercise of faith, patience, and submission to the will of God. He was much engaged in prayer, for himself, that God would heal the sinfulness of his nature, pardon all his transgressions, deliver him from an evil heart of unbelief, and from temptation;—teach him to improve all providences, and to live upon Christ and the promises. He also prayed much for the nation, for the church of God, and for all with whom he stood connected. He prayed particularly for Scotland, the churches in France, New England, and foreign plantations.—Afterward, having forgotten to crave a blessing upon something which was given him, he prayed, “Lord, pardon my neglect and forgetfulness of thee.—Lord, glorify thy name in my poor spirit; and let none of thy people ever see me shrink from thee, for Jesus Christ’s sake.” When his friends recommended him to cast the burden of his pains and sickness upon the Lord his God, he said, “I should act very unworthily, if after I have preached to others, that they should cast their burdens upon God, I should not do so myself.”—Having spent his life in the most laborious study, and in promoting the cause of Christ and the interests of true religion, he resigned his spirit to God who gave it, in the firm hope of eternal life, through the Lord Jesus Christ, in the year 1647, aged forty-six years. His remains were interred in the New church, Westminster.^a

Mr Palmer was a gentleman of a low bodily stature, and had a weakly constitution; but his soul was richly adorned with a splendid variety of talents and graces. He was highly distinguished by constancy and courage, in the most trying situations, and by unshaken fidelity to his engagements. He was indefatigably laborious. He had a competent estate, and chose a single life, and was therefore able to do much for the benefit of his fellow-creatures. He generously maintained several poor scholars at his own expence, in the college, and at his death, he left a considerable sum of money for that purpose. Granger styles him “a man of uncommon learning, generosity, and politeness;” and also observes, “that he possessed a most excellent character; that he wished for peace during the civil war; and that he spoke the French language with as much facility as his mother tongue.”^b

^a Clark’s Lives, and Neal’s Puritans.

^b Granger’s Biog. Hist. vol. ii. pp. 182, 183.

Mr Palmer's writings.—1. An endeavour of making the Principles of the Christian Religion plain and easy. In modern times, this book is entitled, The Principles of the Christian Religion made plain and easy. The sixth impression was printed, in 1645.—2. Of making Religion one's Business.—This last and several other pieces were afterward published together, entitled, Memorials of Godliness and Christianity; the eleventh edition of which was printed, London, 1673, and the thirteenth edition, recommended, in a short preface, by Mr Tong of London, was printed in 1708.—3. Sermons preached before the Parliament, one of which is entitled, “The Necessity and Encouragement of Utmost Venturing for the Churches Help, together with the Sin, Folly and Mischief of Self-idolizing; a Sermon from Esther iv. 13, 14. before the honourable House of Commons, on the day of the monthly solemn Fast, 28th June, 1643.” 4to. pp. 71. London, 1643. Another is entitled, “The Glass of God's Providence toward his Faithful Ones; held forth in a Sermon preached from Psal. xcix, 8. to the two honourable Houses of Parliament, at Margaret's Westminster, Aug. 13, 1644, being an extraordinary Day of Humiliation.” 4to. pp. 66. full and close. London, 1644. In this most elaborate and excellent sermon, the learned and pious author exhibits the great failings which the best of men are liable unto, and upon which God is sometimes provoked to take vengeance. The whole is faithfully applied, in a special manner, to a more careful observation of the Solemn National Covenant, and most particularly against the ungodly Toleration, pleaded for under pretence of Liberty of Conscience. In the application of the Sermon, he made a motion, that the Covenant should be read every Fast-day. He adds, “I cannot but again say, I am much afraid, it hath been little pondered by the most of us since we have taken it. And undoubtedly the great business aimed at in every rightly observed Fast, is the renewing of a Solemn Covenant with God. It is a duty altogether indispensible, And unto this Covenant we have very great bonds lying upon us to tie us most strictly. We lifted up our hands to God in it, in the day of our calamity, in the time of our fear and trouble; when we were very low. And since that time God hath raised us very high, in comparison of our condition then, and afforded us a great deal of help, from men and from Himself; and it contains both the general of all our duties to God and man, and very many and most necessary particulars, justly and wisely limited." p. 42.—His remarks respecting Toleration, and other things, may be read with interest. I have seen another Sermon of his from Isai. lviii. 12. London, 1646.—4. "The Christian Sabbath Vindicated, in a full Discourse concerning the Sabbath and the Lord's day," in which he was assisted by Mr Daniel Cawdrey. 2 vols. 4to. London, 1645, and 1652.—5. "Scripture and Reason pleaded for defensive Arms," in which he was assisted by some other persons; but Mr Clark says, he had the chief hand in that work.—It may be observed here, That though Mr Palmer's judgment was clear respecting the lawfulness of defensive arms, he was positively against offensive arms.—I have in my possession an ancient Letter of Mr Palmer's, under the date of Aug. 14, 1632. which was printed in the Baptist Annual Register, Jan. 1. 1801. at London. It is a valuable and religious letter. And it is said, at the end of the printed letter, "This, with other papers, in Mr Herbert Palmer's own hand writing, are in the possession of Dr Rippon."

EDWARD PEALE OF COMPTON.

EDWARD PEALE is in the list of the Divines, who met in the famous Assembly at Westminster. And, in the ordinance, which passed both Houses for calling an Assembly of Divines, in 1643, he was appointed one of their number. He is marked in my copy of Neal's list, as giving constant attendance. But I am not able at this time, to give any further account of him.

a See Mr Cawdrey's Writings, vol. i. p. 220.

ANDREW PERNE, A. M.

MINISTER OF WILBY, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES
AT WESTMINSTER.

ANDREW PERNE was born in the year 1596. He seems to have received his education in the University of Cambridge; for he was sometime fellow of Katherine-hall, in that University. Having finished his studies at the University, he, in course of time, became Minister of Wilby in Northamptonshire, where he continued a laborious, zealous, faithful, and successful, preacher, about twenty-seven years. In the year 1643, Mr Perne was chosen a Member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and constantly attended during the whole session. Wood says, that "he was a frequent preacher before the members of the Long Parliament, that began at Westminster, in the year 1640, ran with those times, and published several sermons." And Brook also says, "He often preached before the Parliament, and several of his sermons were published." But I have not been able to ascertain how often he preached before the Parliament, nor what number of his sermons have been published. Nor have any of the above-mentioned authors given us particular information of more than one sermon which he preached before the House of Commons, of which the reader will find an account in its proper place. Upon close search, I have found that Mr Perne preached another time before the House of Commons, at the thanksgiving for the victory given to the forces under the command of Lord Fairfax at Selby in Yorkshire, April 23, 1644. But the sermon, which was preached from Exod. xxxiv. 6. is said not to be printed, at least at that time.

Upon his being called up to London to attend the Assembly, he gained a high reputation, and was offered several considerable preferments; but he refused all these, firmly resolving, with the will of Divine Providence, to return to his pastoral charge, to his affectionate and beloved people, at Wilby. In that place, by his awakening sermons, and very exemplary life and conversation, a most signal and comfortable reformation was, under the Divine blessing, speedily effected. His holy life was an excellent practical comment upon his pure doctrine. While he warmly urged the necessity of holiness upon other persons, he carefully practised it himself. He was a burning and shining light. His people revered and loved him as a father. Mr Ainsworth says, "He was full of spiritual warmth, filled with an holy indignation against sin, active in his work, and never more in his element than when he was in the pulpit." As his life was holy, so his death was happy. He blessed God that he was not afraid to die; nay, he earnestly desired to be gone; and often cried out, during his last sickness,— "When will that hour come? One assault more, and this earthen vessel will be broken, and I shall be with God."

He died Dec. 13, 1654, aged about sixty years. Mr Samuel Ainsworth, one of the silenced nonconformists, preached and published his funeral sermon. His remains were interred in the chancel of Wilby church; where, at the foot of the altar, is the following monumental inscription erected to his memory: Here lieth interred, Mr Andrew Perne, a faithful servant of Jesus Christ, a zealous owner ever of God's cause in perilous times, a powerful and successful preacher of the Gospel, a great blessing to this town and country, where he lived twenty-seven years. He departed Dec. 13, 1654.^a

Mr Perne has a place in Burnham's Pious Memorials, and in Lives of the Puritans. I have seen only one sermon of his, which is entitled, "Gospel-Courage, or a Christian Resolution for God and his Truth; in a sermon preached from Micah iv. 5. before the honourable House of Commons, at Margaret's, Westminster, at a Publick Fast, the 31st of May, 1643." 4to. pp. 32. London, 1643.

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. i. Fasti, col. 80. Neal's Puritans, vol. iv. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii. Cat. of the Preachers before Parliament.

JOHN PHILIPS.

JOHN PHILIPS is in the list of those eminent divines, who met in the famous Assembly at Westminster. His name is also in the ordinance of Parliament for calling an Assembly of learned and godly divines. In that ordinance, he is said to be, "John Philips of Wrentham." And, in my copy of Neal's list of those divines, he is marked as giving constant attendance in the Assembly. But I have not seen any of his writings, nor found any more account of him. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxon. 2d edit. London, 1721, mentions different persons of this name. One John Philipps, who was bishop of the Isle of Man, and who died in 1683, or about that time; another who wrote A Summons to Repentance, Lond. 1584; and one who wrote The Way to Heaven. The first was not our divine; and we have not evidence that any of them was.

BENJAMIN PICKERING.

BENJAMIN PICKERING was a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. In the ordinance of Parliament for calling an Assembly of Divines, he is said to be, of East-Hoathly. He seems to have been pastor of that place, when he was called to sit in the Assembly of Divines. In the year 1644, when he was a member of the Assembly, we are informed, in the title-page of a Sermon, which he preached at that time before the House of Commons, that he was minister of God's Word at Buckstead in Sussex. He wrote his name Pikeriing.

Mr Pickering has published the above Sermon, which is entitled, "A Firebrand Pluckt out of the Burning," from Zech. iii. 2. 4to. pp. 28. London, 1645. And he has also published a very handsome Epistle, addressed to the honourable House of Commons, which is prefixed to that Sermon. In this epistle, he exhorts the honourable senators, to set up a faithful ministry, and to establish judgment and justice in the gates—to let their zeal for the Lord burn, setting up his worship and ordinances in purity. He says, "Be zealous for Christ's cause: delay not to establish his government and discipline with vigour. Proceed so in your reforming, that glory may dwell in our land; that mercy and truth, righteousness and peace may meet together, and kiss each other.—Continue in your integrity, and the Lord will continue a sun and shield to you.—Although Satan be at your right-hand, fear not, so long as our Mediator sits at the right-hand of God."

The following are some of his remarkable expressions and sayings, in his sermon. "It is the Lord's pleasure that the condition of his church many times should be such, as the prophet expresseth: I beheld the earth; and, lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light, Jer. iv. 23. Thus it was with God's people in the Babylonish captivity. Heaven and earth, church and commonwealth, were in confusion. The best undertakings meet with greatest discouragements.—The devil will still be hindering the acting hand, in the things of God. The devil hateth all divine order and pure ordinances, therefore he resists Joshua, in whom the priesthood and divine worship were restored.—Doctrine: God's people may be in the burning, but they shall certainly be rescued and perfectly delivered.—God's wisdom is best seen, when we are at our wit's end; and the Lord's power is most manifest, when we are at the extremity of misery; when we think and say, we are cut off for our parts.—Every sin makes us as ready to take fire, even as gun-powder: let us therefore have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire: and this fire of the enemy is dreadful.—He has now drawn out his sword to avenge the quarrel of his Covenant, and the fire of his anger burns; but he may complain as of old, The Founder melts in vain.—When we are in the burning, look up to Jesus Christ.—In Christ we shall have safety. Labour for the Spirit of comfort; the refreshings of this Spirit, as living water, will cool the heat of the spent soul. Pray that the Lord would mitigate the flames—and labour to be constant—hold fast the name of Christ.”—

From what our author has published to the world, he appears to have been furnished with considerable abilities, to have been pious and learned, and very courageous in the cause of truth.

SAMUEL DE LA PLACE.

SAMUEL DE LA PLACE was Minister of the French church, and a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. His name is in the ordinance of the Parliament for calling an Assembly of learned and godly divines, in the year 1643; and it is also in the list of the divines who met in the Assembly at Westminster that year. And, he was one of the divines in that Assembly, who subscribed the proposition, “That Jesus Christ, as King of the Church, hath himself appointed a church-government distinct from the civil magistrate.”—

I cannot give any farther account of Mr de la Place.

WILLIAM PRICE, B. D.

WILLIAM PRICE was one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. His name is both in the ordinance of the Parliament for calling the Assembly, and also in the list of those divines who met in it. In the ordinance of the Parliament, he is said to be, "Mr Price of Paul's Church in Covent-Garden." In the title-page of his sermon, in 1646, he is said to be "Pastor of Waltham-Abbey, and one of the Assembly of Divines." And we find, that in the year 1646, Mr Obadiah Sedgwick became preacher at Paul's, Covent-Garden. Mr Baillie considers Mr Price among the ablest divines in the Assembly, when speaking of his being against the institution of the ruling elder by divine right.^a Mr Price subscribed the above-mentioned proposition, respecting Jesus Christ, as King of the Church.

Mr Price has published a Sermon, which is entitled, "Man's Delinquency attended by Divine Justice, intermixed with Mercy; displayed in a Sermon from Ezra ix. 6, 7, 8. to the House of Lords assembled in Parliament, in the Abbey-church, Westminster, Nov. 25, 1646. Fast." 4to. London, 1646. In that valuable sermon, Mr Price has the following choice sayings.—"We are ashamed of our glory, and glory in our shame.—When the soul-wounded publican durst not look up to heaven, heaven looked down to him." Speaking of sinning against clear light, he says, "Great knowledge greatens sins; for knowledge is like the unicorn's horn, that doth well in a wise and good man's hand, but ill on a beast's head." I have seen this sermon of Mr Price's both in England and in Scotland.

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 401.

NICHOLAS PROFFET.

NICHOLAS PROFFET was one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. His name is both in the ordinance of Parliament for calling that Assembly, and also in the list of those divines who met there. And, in Neal's list, he is marked as giving constant attendance during the session. He was sometime rector of Peter's in Marlborough, in the county of Wilts. He was in Marlborough, when he was appointed by the Parliament to sit in the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. In the year 1644, it is said, that he was then Minister of Edmonton, and one of the Assembly of Divines. Edmonton is a village of Middlesex, in the neighbourhood of London, and a convenient place for attending the Assembly.

Mr Proffet has published a very good and seasonable sermon, which is entitled, "England's Impenitence under Smiting, Causing Anger to Continue, and the Destroying hand of God to be stretched forth still;" a sermon preached from Isai. ix. 13. before the honourable House of Commons, at a Public Fast, Sept. 25, 1644. 4to. pp. 48. London, 1645. He was also the author of a very judicious Epistle, which was prefixed to this sermon, and addressed to the honourable House of Commons. 4to. pp. 4. Both this sermon and the epistle were again printed at Dumfries, in the year 1799, and dispersed through the south of Scotland, and in several parts of England and Ireland, and very highly esteemed by some persons. The author of these Memoirs has a number of the copies of this valuable sermon in hand, price 6d. He is sorry, upon reading the sermon, that he cannot give any farther account of Mr Nicholas Proffet.

WILLIAM RATHBAND, M. A.

WILLIAM RATHBAND was a Member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. I cannot find his name in the ordinance of Parliament for calling that Assembly. It is not in my copy; but it is found in the list of those Divines who convened in the Assembly at Westminster. In Mr Neal's list, he is said to be "Mr William Rathband, of High-gate;" and is marked as giving constant attendance. He seems to have been a superadded Divine. Beside those who were originally appointed to sit in the Assembly, in order to supply vacancies by death, desertion, or otherwise, the Parliament named other persons from time to time, who were called superadded Divines. —Mr Rathband preached before the Parliament from Jer. vii. 3, at their solemn fast, July 31, 1644; but the Sermon was not then printed. Messrs Simeon Ashe and William Rathband published "A Letter of many Ministers in Old England requesting the judgment of their Brethren in New England, concerning nine Propositions, &c." with a Preface, 4to. 1643. There were two eminent Divines of this name, in England, about that time, the father and the son. William Rathband, the father, was a Puritan Divine of great eminence in his day. He preached nineteen years at a Chapel in Lancashire, but afterward, being much persecuted for nonconformity, he removed into Northumberland. Having published a book against the Brownists, which Dr Stillingfleet quoted to prove that preaching, when prohibited by the established laws, was contrary to the doctrine of all the old Nonconformists; Mr William Rathband, his son, in a letter to Mr Baxter, assures him, that his father was not to be reckoned among those who held that sentiment, since he exercised his ministry, though contrary to law, for many years at a Chapel in Lancashire; and after he was silenced he preached in private, as he had opportunity, and the times would bear, of which I myself, says he, was sometimes a witness. Afterward, upon the invitation of a gentleman, he exercised his ministry at Belcham, in Northumberland, about a year; and from thence he removed to Ovingham, in the same county, where he preached about a year; till, being silenced there, he retired into a private family. He had two sons in the ministry, one of whom was a Puritan of considerable eminence; who, during the civil wars, and upon the reduction of York by the Parliament's forces, was constituted one of the four preachers maintained by the State in that city with honourable stipends. His other son, the above Mr William Rathband, was one of the silenced Nonconformists in 1662; and is said to have been one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, though Dr Calamy does not mention this, in his Account of him among the ejected or silenced Ministers. In the Account, he says, that Mr Rathband was ejected from Southhold by Burntwood, in the county of Essex, was M. A. brother to Mr Rathband sometime Preacher in the Minster of York. He had his education in Oxon. After many removes he settled at High-gate, where he continued till his death. In the Continuation of the Account, he says, "Mr Slater, who had been acquainted with him above fifty years, preached and published his funeral sermon. They two were of the same college, and under the same tutor. He died in October, 1695. As he is noted for the brother, so was he also the son of an old Nonconformist Minister, Mr William Rathband, who wrote against the Brownists."

I cannot find any other nor further account of Mr Rathband.

a Calamy's Acc. vol. ii. Cont. vol. i. Brook's Puritans, vol. ii.

WILLIAM REYNER, B. D.

PASTOR OF EGGHAM IN SURREY, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

WILLIAM REYNER received his education in the University of Cambridge. He had much success in his ministry, in his younger days, among the gentry. He was offered the Presidentship of Magdalen-College in Oxford, or a Fellowship at Eaton, but he declined acceptance, because he had preached against Pluralities, and was firmly resolved to act according to his judgment, though his living was not worth above sixty pounds yearly. He was accounted an eminent divine, and accordingly he was chosen to be a Member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is said to have given constant attendance during the session. He was one of those who subscribed the proposition that "Jesus Christ, as King of the church, hath himself appointed a church-government distinct from the civil magistrate." He was Minister of Eggham, in the county of Surrey, near London, about forty-six years. He was cast out from that place, by the Act of Uniformity. He had no visible prospect of a future subsistence when he was ejected; and yet he lived cheerfully, and was never in want, under the unremitting care of Divine providence. And when he died he was worth little or nothing. He continued in the parish until his death in the year 1666, and left this world with a good reputation. He preached privately after his ejection, as far as his ability admitted, and was never disturbed. He was greatly afflicted with the stone for many years, though after he was silenced, he never had any acute pains. When he was dead, a stone was taken out of his bladder, weighing ten ounces, and measuring nine inches and a half, in the form of an heart. He was a man of general learning; and in particular an eminent Church Historian. He was intimate with Arch-bishop Usher, and highly esteemed by him. The famous Non-conformist Divine, Mr Richard Wavel, who greatly exalted our Lord Jesus Christ, and the grace of God in him, in his preaching, was sent to live with Mr Reyner of Eggham in Surrey, and studied divinity under his direction, when he left the university of Oxford. Upon his being ready for the pulpit, Mr Reyner employed him to preach for him one part of the Lord's day; and marrying his wife's daughter, he assisted him constantly, as long as he continued to officiate in his church at Eggham.^a Mr Wavel seems to have profited much, by being under such an instructor.

Mr Reyner has published "Babylon's Ruining Earthquake, and the Restoration of Zion;" a sermon from Hag. ii. 6, 7, before the honourable House of Commons, at Margaret's, Westminster, at their public fast, August 28th, 1644. 4to. pp. 60. London, 1644. Dr Calamy says that he printed nothing but this one sermon.

EDWARD REYNOLDS, D. D.

AN EMINENT ENGLISH DIVINE, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

EDWARD REYNOLDS was born at Southampton, a sea-port town of Hampshire, in England, in the month of Nov. 1593. His father was Austin Reynolds, one of the customers of Southampton. The subject of this Memoir, being bred at the Free school in that place, became postmaster of Merton-College, Oxford, in the year 1615, and Probationer-fellow in 1620. This place he obtained by his great knowledge of the Greek language in which he was eminently skilful. And here he was peculiarly distinguished as a good disputant and orator. After he had taken the degree of Master of Arts, he entered into the holy ministry, and became a very eminent preacher. He was sometime Preacher to the honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn, and Rector of Braynton in Northamptonshire. When the civil wars brake out in 1642, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, "having long before that time been Puritanically affected," as Wood says. In the year 1643, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is represented as giving constant attendance during the session. He was appointed one of the Select committee for the examination and approbation of those ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. In 1645, he was chosen one of the Committee of accommodation.^a He was a covenanter, a frequent preacher in London, and sometimes before the long Parliament, by whom he was appointed in 1646, one of the six ministers to go to Oxford, and preach the scholars into obedience to them. After this he was one of their Visitors in that University, was made Dean of Christ-Church, and Vice-chancellor of the University in 1648, when he proceeded Doctor of Divinity. He was also Vice-chancellor in 1649. But being ejected from his deanery in the latter end of the year 1650, for refusing to take the Engagement, he retired to his former charge for sometime. He lived afterward mostly in London, and preached there, and became minister for sometime of Lawrence-jury. Afterward he struck in with General Monk, with a view to bring in the King, using his interest for that end in London, where he was much esteemed. Wood says that "in the city of London, he was the pride and glory of the Presbyterian party." He was of very great respectability among the Calvinists.

^a Calamy's Acc. vol. ii. p. 666. and Cont. vol. i. pp. 85, 86.

When the secluded Members were restored to Parliament they restored Dr Reynolds to his deanery of Christ-Church, on the 11th of March, 1659. And on the 26th of May, 1660, he, with Mr Edward Calamy, was made chaplain to the king, who was then at Canterbury, in order to his restoration. After this he preached several times before the King, and both Houses of Parliament.

^a Neal's Puritans, vol. iii. chap. ii. and vi.

And in the end of June, being desired to quit his deanery, he was the next month elected, by virtue of the King's letter, Warden of Merton-College, Oxford. He now conformed, and was consecrated bishop of Norwich on the 6th of January following. Wood here observes, that, "after he had taken the covenant, and had preached against Episcopacy and the ceremonies of the Church of England, he was consecrated thereunto in Peter's church within the city of Westminster." He adds, that "it was verily thought by his contemporaries, that he would have never been given to change, had it not been to please a covetous and politic consort, who put him upon those things he did." Be that as it may, he became bishop of Norwich. The times were changed, and too many persons also changed with these. It is a good thing that the heart be established with grace. Wood says, that "Dr Reynolds was a person of excellent parts and endowments, of a very good wit, fancy and judgment, a great divine, and much esteemed by all parties for his preaching and florid style." Another person, who was well acquainted with him, says, "that he was a man of singular affability, meekness and humility, of great learning, a frequent preacher, and a constant resident."

He died on the 28th of July, 1676, about the seventy-sixth year of his age. Neal says that "he was reckoned one of the most eloquent pulpit-men of his age, and a good old Puritan, who never concerned himself with the politics of the Court."

Dr Reynolds' Writings.—The Vanity of the Creature, Eccl. iv. 14, 4to.—The Sinfulness of Sin, with the Use of the Law, Rom. iv. 9. and vi. 12. and vii. 13.—The Life of Christ: or, The Fellowship of the Saints with Him, in his Life, Sufferings, and Resurrection. These three Treatises have been all bound together in one vol. 4to. Lond. 1631, and the fourth edit. pp. 535. Lond. 1642.—An Explication of the cx. Psalm, 4to. pp. 525. Lond. 1632. The second edit. 1635. The third edit.

1642.—Meditations on the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's last Supper. 4to. pp. 240. Lond. 1638. The 2d edit. 1647.—Israel's Prayer in the time of Trouble, with God's gracious Answer thereunto, in seven sermons on so many days of solemn humiliation, on the xivth chap. of Hos. 4to. Lond. 1645, and 1648. And the first sermon also, Lond. 1642.—A Treatise of the Passions and Faculties of the Soul of Man. 4to. about 500 pages, London, 1640, 1650, and 1656. All these pieces were collected into one folio volume and printed at London, 1658, pp. 1110, with the author's picture, and entitled, "The Works of Edward Reynolds, D. D."—Thirty of his sermons preached on several solemn occasions, between the year 1634, and that of his death, some of which had been different times printed, were reprinted in the second impression of his Works, Lond. 1679, large folio, very elegant. He wrote the English Annotations on Ecclesiastes, which are admirably done. He was also the author of the Epistolary Preface to Burlee's Corruptory Correction, &c. of some Notes of T. Pierce of God's Decrees. He is also said to be the author of The Humble Proposals respecting the Engagement. 4to. London, 1650, one sheet. Probably he has written other things which I have not seen. His writings have been much esteemed, and he is very happy in his similitudes.

ARTHUR SALWEY.

PASTOR OF SEVERN-STOKE, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

A RTHUR SALWEY was Pastor of Severn-stoke, in the county of Worcester, in England. In the time of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, and was a zealous Reformer. He was a warm friend to the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, and of the reformation. In the year 1643, he was appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He is marked, in Mr Neal's list of those Divines, as giving constant attendance during the session.

He preached a sermon from 1 Kings xviii. 21, to the Honourable House of Commons, on the day of the monthly fast, 25th Oct. 1643, at Margaret's, Westminster. This sermon is entitled, "Halting Stigmatized." 4to. pp. 21. London, 1644. He has an Epistle Dedicatory to the Honourable House of Commons, which is prefixed to the sermon. In the application of that sermon, he says: "Honourable Senators, Hath there not been halting within your walls? Have not many of your members unworthily forsaken you, and miserably deserted the glorious cause of God? The Lord open their eyes and heal their backslidings."

He warmly exhorts to take up the profession of godliness upon good grounds, and for right ends. He adds, "Act in the strength of Jesus Christ. I can do all things, says the apostle, through Christ who strengthens me. Phil. iv. 13. Get your hearts warmed with the love of Jesus Christ, which the apostle calls a constraining love, 2 Cor. v. 14.—For love has a compulsive faculty. Reward draws, punishment drives; but love is most efficacious in persuading us unto the discharge of our duty. Lastly, fix your faith upon the promises, study Moses's opticks, eye Him who is invisible. Heb. xi. 27. And eye the threats also. Look upon that good which God promiseth, as the greatest good, and upon the evil which he threateneth, as the greatest evil. And Honourable Patriots, I beseech you suffer the word of exhortation. Let it be your chiefest care to follow God, in your personal holiness, and in promoting a National reformation. Follow him personally. It will be your greatest honour to be his servants.—You have an admirable pattern, the zealous prophet Elijah, a man of such transcendant zeal, that to heighten the expression thereof, some have said of him, that when he drew his mother's breasts, he was seen to suck in fire. I wish from my very soul, that a double portion of his spirit may be given unto you, that you may act in his power and spirit. Elijah opposed idolatry and oppression, so do ye. Down with Baal's altars, down with Baal's priests: do not, I beseech you, consent unto a toleration of Baal's worship in this kingdom upon any political consideration whatsoever. I have heard that you have already voted that you will never give your consent to the toleration of the Romish mass in this kingdom. I will take up the words of David's prayer, 1 Chron. xxix. 18. "O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of your hearts." He faithfully reminds them of their solemn covenants, and of making the word of God their rule in the reformation of religion. Near the conclusion of the sermon, he says, "Shortly, I hope, a plat-form of worship, discipline, and government, will be presented unto you, by those whom you have employed for that purpose. I beseech you, bring all unto the touch-stone of the word. Believe it, Worthies, that form of government will be best for the state, which is most agreeable unto the word. It hath been often said by the bishops of the government of the Reformed churches, and they did commonly instance in Presbytery, that it was no friend to monarchy. But I am sure that Prelacy is no enemy unto tyranny. The Lord guide you in the managing hereof, that what you shall do herein, may tend unto the glory of God, and the good and peace of his church." The sermon is well composed for the time. I have seen this sermon in different parts of Scotland; but have not seen any more of the author's writings, which I lament.

HENRY SCUDDER, B. D.

PASTOR OF COLLINGBORN, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HENRY SCUDDER received his education in Christ's College, Cambridge. Dr Fuller has placed him among the learned writers of that College. He was afterward minister at Drayton in Oxfordshire. In that station; he was very highly esteemed on account of his singular and exemplary piety, his remarkable prudence, and his excellent ministerial labours. Mr William Whately, a man of distinguished eminence, being then at Banbury, Mr Robert Harris being placed at Hanwell, and Mr Scudder at Drayton, there were three eminently pious and learned neighbours, who were closely united, not only in judgment and affection, but also in affinity, Mr Harris married Mr Whately's sister, and Mr Scudder, his wife's sister. These three eminent men met weekly for some time, and by turns translated and analyzed each person his chapter of the Bible. Afterward, Mr Scudder became pastor of Collingburn-Parish, in Wiltshire, a county of England. And, in the year 1648, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is said to have constantly attended. He was one of those divines who subscribed the proposition, "That Jesus Christ, as King of the church, has himself appointed a church-government distinct from the civil magistrate."

He was eminently distinguished as the author of a very excellent work, which is entitled, "The Christian's Daily Walk in Holy Security and Peace." This book contains familiar directions, clearly shewing how we should walk with God, in the whole course of our lives. It has passed through numerous editions, and is very highly esteemed, in the present day, among serious Christians. Dr Owen and Mr Richard Baxter have prefixed to it their commendatory epistles.

Dr Owen says, "It is now above thirty years ago since I first perused the ensuing treatise. And although until upon this present occasion I never read it, nor to my knowledge saw it since; yet the impression it left upon me in the days of my youth has, to say no more, continued a grateful remembrance of it upon my mind. Being desired, upon this new edition, to give some testimony unto its worth and usefulness, I esteem myself obliged so to do, by the benefit which I had myself received from it." And upon informing us that he had then given it another perusal, he adds, "I shall only as-quaint the reader, that I am so far from subtracting my account, or making an abatement in an esteem thereof, that my respect unto it, and valuation of it, is greatly increased; wherein also I do rejoice, for reasons not here to be mentioned.—There is generally that soundness and gravity in the whole doctrine of the book, that weight of wisdom in the directions given for practice, that judgment in the resolution of doubts and objections, that breathing of a spirit of holiness, zeal, humility, and the fear of the Lord, in the whole; that I judge, and am satisfied therein, that it will be found of singular use, unto all such as in sincerity desire a compliance with the author's design."

Mr Baxter says, "I remember not any book which is written to be the daily companion of Christians, to guide them in the practice of a holy life, which I prefer before this: I am sure none of my own. For so sound is the doctrine of this book, and so prudent and spiritual, apt and savoury, and all so suited to our ordinary cases and conditions, that I heartily wish no family may be without it. And many a volume, good and useful, are now in religious people's hands, which I had rather were all unknown than this. And I think it more service to the souls of men, to call them to the notice and use of such a treasure, and to bring such old and excellent writings out of oblivion and the dust, than to encourage very many who overvalue their own, and to promote the multiplication of things common and undigested, to the burying of more excellent treatises in the heap."

This work was so very highly esteemed, that it was translated into High Dutch, by the eminently learned Mr Theodore Haak, who has translated the Dutch Annotations upon the Bible into English, and is said to have projected the first plan of the Royal Society in London.

Mr Scudder also wrote the Life of the celebrated Mr William Whately, which is prefixed to his Prototypes, or Examples out of the Book of Genesis, applied to our Instruction and Reformation, folio, London, 1640.*

* Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. i. p. 621. vol. ii. pp. 747, 846.
2d ed. and Brook's Patians, vol. ii.

And our author was one of the preachers before the Parliament. One of his sermons, which was printed, is entitled, "God's Warning to England by the Voice of his Rod, delivered in a Sermon, preached at Margaret's, Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Solemn Fast, Oct. 30, 1644." The text is Micah vi. 9. 4to. pp. 35. London, 1644. With a large epistle Dedicatory to the House of Commons prefixed. I have seen this sermon in different parts of Scotland, and also The Christian's Daily Walk, the 11th edition, 1674, recommended to all Professors by Dr Owen, and Mr Baxter. And I have seen the 12th edition of the Christian's Daily Walk, both in Scotland and England, London, 1761.

LAZARUS SEAMAN, D. D.

MINISTER OF ALLHALLOWS, BREAD-STREET, LONDON, MASTER OF PETER-HOUSE, CAMBRIDGE, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

LAZARUS SEAMAN was born in Leicester, the county-town and capital of Leicestershire, almost in the centre of England. He received his education in Emanuel-College, Cambridge; but as he came to the College, in mean circumstances, he was obliged soon to leave it and to teach School some time for his external support. Dr Calamy says, "that his learning sprang from himself." He seems to have been partly self-taught. He was some time Chaplain to the Earl of Northumberland. He applied himself closely to his studies, and made very great proficiency in different branches of learning. He is generally allowed to have been an eminently learned man. A sermon, which he preached at Martin's, Ludgate, was the mean, under Divine Providence, of procuring him that lecture. By his remarkable talents and industry, he soon gained a shining reputation, in the religious and learned world. And he came to be pastor of Allhallows, in Bread-street, London. He was presented, by Bishop Laud to Bread-street parish, in 1642, by order of Parliament; but Laud informed the Earl of Northumberland, whose chaplain Mr Seaman was, that out of respect to his Lordship, he had before he received that order designed him for that benefice.

In 1643, Mr Seaman was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is said to have constantly attended. He appeared very active in the Assembly, and was eminently skilful in managing controversies in divinity. Mr William Jenkyn, who was intimately acquainted with him, and who at his desire preached his funeral sermon, says; "He was a person of a most deep, piercing, and eagle-eyed judgment in all points of controversial divinity. He had few equals, if any superiors, in ability to decide and determine a dark and doubtful controversy. He could state a theological question with admirable clearness and acuteness, and knew how, in a controversy, to cleave, as we say, an hair. Nor was he less able to defend than to find out the truth." Dr Calamy says, that "he was a great Divine, thoroughly studied in the Original languages of the Holy Scriptures; always carrying about with him a small Plantin Bible, without points, for his ordinary use. He was well studied in the controversy of Church-government, which was the occasion of his being sent by the Parliament with their Commissioners, when they treated with King Charles I. in the Isle of Wight, where his Majesty took particular notice of the Doctor's singular ability in the debates about church-government, which were afterward printed in the Collection of his Majesty's works."

He was allowed to be a very able disputant. Mr Jenkyn says, "I had almost said, an invincible disputant." He adds; "His conquests were as many as his contentions (debates) with any adversaries of the truth; and so conspicuous were his abilities herein, that he sometimes disheartened opposers in their very entrance into the lists of disputation with him." Upon the invitation of an honourable lady, who was the head of a noble family, and who had been often solicited by the Romish priests to change her profession of religion, and become a Roman Catholic, he engaged two of the ablest priests they could select in a dispute, in the presence of both heads of the family for their satisfaction. He silenced these priests respecting Transubstantiation, which was the ground of the disputation, at that time, and was the instrument in preserving that whole family from a revolt, and in keeping them stedfast in the Protestant Religion. When the crafty seducers, who wished only to go over where the hedge is lowest, or like the Philistines, to fight when there are no swords in Israel, perceived the great abilities of their antagonist, they shamefully quitted the field, and never dared either to give or to take the stroke of a formed syllogism, according to Jenkyn. And those persons who were popishly inclined stood amazed, upon this occasion, in seeing the cowardliness of their champions.

In the year 1644, Mr Seaman was constituted Master of Peter-House, in the University of Cambridge, by the Earl of Manchester, upon having been first examined and approved by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. The Earl of Manchester, in pursuance of an ordinance of Parliament, for regulating and reforming the University of Cambridge, came in person into the Chapel of Peter-House, on the 11th of April, 1644, and, by the authority to him committed, did, in that place, declare and publish Mr Lazarus Seaman to be constituted Master of the said Peter-House, in the room of Dr Cosins, late Master there, but now justly and lawfully ejected thence: requiring Mr Seaman, then present, to take upon him that office, putting him into the Master's seat, and delivering to him the statutes of the College, in token of his investiture, straitly charging the Fellows, &c. to acknowledge and yield obedience to him, as actually Master of the College, and sufficiently authorized to execute that office. Upon his admission, the Earl gave him an instrument under his hand and seal to the same effect; and he was required to make the following solemn declaration:

“ I do solemnly and seriously promise, in the presence of Almighty God, the Searcher of all hearts, that, during the time of my continuance in that charge, I shall faithfully labour to promote piety and learning in myself, the fellows, scholars, and students, who do or shall belong to the said College, agreeably to the late solemn national league and covenant by me sworn and subscribed, with respect to all the good and wholesome statutes of the said College, and of the University, correspondent to the said covenant; and by all means to procure the welfare, and perfect reformation both of that College and University, so far as to me appertains."

LAZARUS SEAMAN.

In this high and public station, he discovered his great abilities, learning and usefulness, and was beneficial to many persons. He acquitted himself very honourably. And he gained much reputation in the learned world, when he proceeded Doctor of Divinity. He took this degree by performing his exercises which were appointed by the statutes of the University; and did not obtain it by the favour of majesty, which some have accounted the fountain of honour, nor for money. He then displayed his abilities and erudition, in a peculiar manner, in polemical divinity. He asserted and maintained the Providence of God in disposing of political governments; and it is said, that he cast much light upon that subject, which was not well understood before that time, and but little studied. He defended his position with great ability and force of argument. He was generally allowed to be an excellent casuist, a good expositor of the Holy Scriptures, and both a very judicious and moving preacher. In his latter days, he much studied the prophetic parts of the Sacred Writings. He wrote some Notes on the Revelations, which he presented to Lord Warton; but it is said, that these were never printed.

He lost all his places at the Restoration, being ejected by the Act of Uniformity. He lived afterward a Nonconformist, mostly in Warwick-court, near Warwick-lane; in London, according to Wood. His patience, under very acute pains, in his last sickness, was truly admirable. In the midst of his tortures, he greatly admired free grace, justification by faith through the righteousness of Christ, and highly extolled the glorious Sovereign of the Universe, who is just in all his ways, and holy in all his works. Mr Jenkyn says, "I never admired his scholarship so much as I did his patience, the lesson in which he grew so perfect in the School of affliction."

He died in peace, Wood says, about the 9th of Sept. 1675, "much lamented by the Brethren in regard he was a learned man." Mr Jenkyn preached his funeral sermon from 2 Peter i. 15. on the 12th of Sept. 1675, in which he gives him a very high commendation. He says, that Dr Seaman was a burning and shining light; an interpreter one of a thousand; a scribe instructed to the kingdom of heaven, like a man who is an householder, who bringeth out of his treasure things new and old. I may justly say of him, That he was an ocean of Theology, and that he had so thoroughly digested the whole body of divinity, that he could upon all occasions discourse upon any point without labour. He was a living body of Divinity, and his tongue as the pen of a ready writer. He was a person of great stability and steadiness in the truth. I am confident that he valued one truth of Christ, above all the wealth of both the Indies.—He was deeply and tenderly sensible of the state of the church of Christ. He was ever very inquisitive how it fared with the people of God in foreign parts; and this not out of Athenian curiosity, but out of a public spirit of Christianity.—And he was as near to Germany, France, yea, to America, in his sympathy and resentments, as he was distant in place.—He was ready to every good work—Industrious and indefatigable in his Calling—Admirably prudent both in his speech and behaviour—And an example of patience in suffering affliction.

He left a very valuable Library, which is said to have been the first that was sold in England by auction, and brought seven hundred pounds. He has extant the following

Writings.—Salomon's Choice: or, A Precedent for Kings and Princes, and all who are in Authority; a sermon from 1 Kings iii. 9, before the Honourable House of Commons at Margaret's, Westminster, at their public Fast, Sept. 25th, 1644. 4to. pp. 47. Lond. 1644.—The Head of the Church, the Judge of the World: or, The Doctrine of the Day of Judgment briefly Opened and Applied; a sermon preached from Acts xvii. 30, 31, before the House of Peers, at Westminster, Fast, 27th Jan. 1646-47. London, 1647.—A Vindication of the Judgment of the Reformed Churches, and Protestant Divines, from Misrepresentations concerning Ordination, and Laying on of Hands. 4to. pp. 96. Lond. 1647. This was in Answer to Mr S. Simpson's Diatribe, of unordained persons preaching.—And a sermon before the Lord Mayor, against Divisions, April 7th, 1650.* Dr Seaman has also a Farewell Sermon from Heb. xiii. 20, 21, at his ejection, at the close of which he observes, That the care of the Church is in the hands of Christ,—that all Providences respecting it, designed to exercise and to try it, must be borne with patience; approving what he orders, and doing whatever he commands; with a cheerful dependence upon the faithfulness of the Great Shepherd of the Sheep, who being brought again from the dead, lives for ever; and a firm reliance on God's Covenant.

OBADIAH SEDGWICK, B. D.

PASTOR OF COGGES-HALL IN ESSEX, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

OBADIAH SEDGWICK was born in the parish of St. Peter in Marlborough, in Wiltshire, in England, in the year 1600. He received his grammatical education at or near the place of his birth. In the year 1616, he was sent to Queen's College, Oxford; but not continuing a Calamy's Account, vol. ii. pp. 16, 17. Cont. vol. i. p. 17. Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. ii. and Jenkyn's fun. sermon.

VOL. II.

long there, he retired to Magdalen-hall, in the same University, where he took the degrees in Arts. Having finished his accademical studies, he entered into the ministerial office, and became Chaplain to Lord Horatio Vere, whom he accompanied to the Low Countries. After his return to his native country, he went again to Oxford, and, upon performing certain exercises, he was admitted to the reading of the sentences, in the latter end of the year 1629. He was tutor to Matthew Hale, who was afterward the much celebrated Lord Chief Justice. Leaving the University a second time, he became preacher at Mildred's, Bread-street, London; but was driven from his living and the people of his charge, by the merciless oppression and iron rod of the haughty prelates. In the year 1639, he became minister of Cogges-hall in Essex, where he continued two or three years. Upon the commencement of the civil wars, he returned to London, and to his ministry at Mildred's, and was often called to preach before the Parliament. In the year 1642, he became Chaplain to Colonel Hollis's regiment, in the Parliament's Army. In the following year, he was appointed one of the Licensers of the press for books of Divinity, and chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and he constantly attended.

He was a very zealous covenanter. Wood says, "that the Members of Parliament constituted him one of the Assembly of Divines, as being a covenanter to the purpose." The same writer observes, evidently with a very hostile design, "that while Mr Sedgwick preached at Mildred's, which was only to exasperate the people to rebel and confound Episcopacy, it was usual with him, especially in hot weather, to unbutton his doublet in the pulpit, that his breath might be the longer, and his voice more audible, to rail against the King's party, and those who were near him, whom he called popish counsellors." The same author adds, "He was a great leader and abettor of the Reformation pretended to be carried on by the Presbyterians; whose peaceable maxims, like razors set with oil, cut the throat of majesty with a keen smoothness. This he did in an especial manner, in Sept. 1644, when he, with great concernment, told the people, several times, that God was angry with the army for not cutting off delinquents."

It has also been said, that Mr Sedgwick was "a preacher of treason, rebellion, and nonsense," even in his sermons before the Parliament. But his sermons are extant, and how far he was guilty, every pious and judicious reader will easily judge. It has been the common lot of the faithful friends and servants of Christ to be loaded with calumnies and reproaches, since the commencement of Christianity. The malicious Jews laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove; while he answered for himself, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cesar, have I offended any thing at all, Acts xxv. 7, 8.

In the year 1646, Mr Sedgwick became preacher at Paul's, Covent-garden; where he was much followed, and is said to have been instrumental in the conversion of many souls. Wood says, "that there, as also sometimes in the country, he kept up the vigour of a Presbyterian ministry, which for divers years prospered according to his mind." In the year 1633, or 1654, he was, by the Parliament, appointed one of the Tryers, or examiners of ministers; and in the year following, he was constituted one of the assistant commissioners of London for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and schoolmasters. He was a very zealous labourer in the Lord's vineyard, and exceedingly active in promoting the work of Reformation. Mr Sedgwick finding at length, that his health began to decline, he resigned his charge, and retired to Marlborough, his native place, where he died about the beginning of Jan. 1658, aged fifty-seven years, and his remains were interred in the chancel of Oglarn, St. Andrew, near Marlborough. He was esteemed a learned Divine, and an orthodox and admired preacher.^a gushing Church of Sardinia. Lond. 1649.—3. England's Preservation; a Sermon from Jer. iv. 3, before Commons, Fast, 25th May, 1642. Lond. 1642.—4. Haman's Vanity; a Sermon from Esther ix. 1, preached to the Honourable House of Commons, at their solemn thanksgiving, June 15th, 1643. 4to. pp. 32. Lond. 1643.—5. A Thanksgiving Sermon, 9th April 1644, from Psa. iii. 8. 4to. Lond. 1644. pp. 32.—6. An Ark against a Deluge: or, Safety in Dangerous Times; a Sermon from Heb. xi. 7, before the House of Commons, at their extraordinary Fast, Oct. 22d, 1644. 4to. pp. 31. Lond. 1644, and 1645.—7. The Nature and Danger of Heresies; a Sermon from Rev. xii. 15, 16, before Commons, Fast. 4to. pp. 44. Lond. 1647.—8. Speech in Guildhall, 1643.—9. The best and worst Malignant. 4to. 1648.—10. Christ the Life, and Death the Gain; a Sermon at the funeral of Rowl. Wilson, a Member of Parliament, from Phil. i. 21. 4to. Lond. 1650.—11. The Doubting Christian Resolved, Lond. 1653. There is a book of his entitled, The Doubting Believer Resolved. Lond. 1641, 12mo. but whether it is the same, or a different book, I cannot tell.—12. Elisha's Lamentation upon the sudden translation of Elijah, preached from 2 Kings ii. 12, at the funeral of Mr. William Strong. 4to. Lond. 1654.—13. The Humbled Sinner Resolved what he should do, to be saved: or, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, the only way for sensible sinners, discovering the Quality, Object, Acts, Seat, Subject, inseparable Concomitants, and Degrees of Justifying Faith. 4to. pp. 282. Lond. 1656.—14. The Fountain opened, and the Water of Life flowing, in several Sermons, from Isa. lv. 1, 2, 3. 4to. Lond. 1657.—15. The Riches of Grace Displayed, in the Offer of Salvation to Poor Sinners, in several Sermons from Rev. iii. 20. 2d edit. Lond. 1658.—16. The Shepherd of Israel: or, God's Pastoral Care over his People, on Psa. xxiii. with the Doctrine of Providence practically handled, on Mat. x. 29, 30, 31. 4to. Lond. 1658.—17. Anatomy of Secret Sins. 4to. Lond. 1660.—18. The Parable of the Prodigal. 4to. pp. 368. Lond. 1660.—19. The Bowels of tender Mercy Sealed in the Everlasting Covenant.

His Writings.—1. Military Discipline for a Christian Soldier. Lond. 1639.—2. Christ's Counsel to his Lan-

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. ii. edit. 2. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

folio. pp. 734. Lond. 1661.—20. Synopsis of Christianity.—21. A Catechism.

I have seen Mr Sedgwick's Writings both in England and Scotland.

SIDRACH SIMPSON, B. D.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL, LONDON, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

SIDRACH SIMPSON received his education in the University of Cambridge. He afterward became a celebrated Preacher in London. His name has often been written Sydrach Simpson; but it was written Sidrach Simpson by himself, and so it is found both in Wood's Athenæ Oxon, and in the original list of those Divines who met at Westminster. He was appointed curate and lecturer of Margaret's Church, Fish-street; but his preaching soon gave offence to Arch-bishop Laud, who, in his metropolitcal visitation, in the year 1635, convened him before him, with several other Divines, for breach of canons. Most of them having promised submission, they were dismissed. But by the intemperate superstition and bigotry of Laud, and the extreme violence with which he exacted conformity, many eminently pious and faithful Divines were driven out of their native country. Among those were Messrs Thomas Goodwin, Philip Nye, Jeremiah Burroughs, William Bridge, and Mr Simpson. They all retired to Holland, and were afterward denominated the five pillars of the Independent or Congregational party; and, in the Assembly of Divines, were distinguished by the name of the Dissenting Brethren.

Upon Mr Simpson's arrival in Holland, he went to Rotterdam; and seeing the comely order of the English church in that place, under the pastoral care of Mr Bridge, he expressed his desire to become a member; and, upon exhibiting the confession of his faith, he was received into their communion. But Mr Simpson, after some time, discovered certain things in that church, which did not meet with his approbation ; and urged the utility and importance of prophesyings, that, after sermon on the Lord's-day, the people might express their doubts, and propose questions to the ministers, with a particular view to their better edification. This motion, however, in connection with some other things, produced a misunderstanding between Mr Bridge and Mr Simpson ; which, at length, caused the latter even to separate himself from the church, and begin a new interest. This new society had a very small beginning, but afterward it considerably increased. Mr Joseph Symonds, another persecuted Puritan, succeeded him in the office of pastor to that church.

About the commencement of the civil war, Mr Simpson returned to England ; and in the year 1643, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and he is said to have constantly attended during the session. In all their debates, he conducted himself with great temper and moderation. He was one of the five Divines who published and presented to the House of Commons, " An Apologetical Narration submitted to the Honourable Houses of Parliament, in favour of the Independents. In the year 1645, he was appointed one of the Committee of Accommodation. In the year 1647, he united with his dissenting brethren in presenting their reasons to the Houses of Parliament, against some parts of the Presbyterian government. In the year 1650, he was appointed, by the Parliamentary Visitors, Master of Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, in the room of Mr Richard Vines, who was turned out for refusing the engagement. In 1654, he was chosen a Member of the Committee for drawing up a catalogue of fundamentals, to be presented to the Parliament. During the same year, he was constituted, by order of the Council, one of the commissioners for the approbation of public preachers ; these commissioners were commonly distinguished by the name of Tryers. In the year 1655, he was appointed, by a commission from Cromwell, one of the new Visitors of the University of Cambridge. During the time of the Long Parliament, he gathered a congregation in London, upon the plan of the Independents, which assembled in Abchurch, near Cannon-street.

Mr Simpson was accounted a meek and quiet Divine of considerable learning, of great piety and devotion, and a celebrated preacher. Dr Grey calls him a celebrated preacher of rebellious principles; which is plain, he says, from the following passage in one of his sermons:

"Reformation is liable to inhuman treacheries. Pharaoh's dealing was very treacherous. He bade the people go; gave them liberty by proclamation; and when he had got them at an advantage, he brought up an army to cut them off. The reforming of the church will meet with such kind of enemies." Mr Brook well observes here, "If the learned Doctor had not been in the habit of ascribing rebellion to the Puritan Divines, he would have found some difficulty in discovering rebellious principles from this passage. And so far from appearing plain from the passage, that he was a celebrated preacher of those principles, we think, it would puzzle all the learning of the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge to make the discovery." Mr Edwards censures him for attempting to propagate his own sentiments respecting church discipline, liberty of conscience, and universal toleration.—In his last sickness, he laboured under spiritual darkness, and some melancholy apprehensions. In such circumstances, some of his friends and brethren assembled at his house, with a view to assist him by their prayers. Their labours were not in vain in the Lord; for in the evening, when they took their leave of him, he thanked them, and said, "He was now satisfied in his soul," and lifting up his hands toward heaven, cried out, "He is come, He is come," and he died that night, in the year 1658.^a

I have seen one sermon by Mr Simpson, which is entitled, "Reformation's Preservation"; opened in a sermon preached from Isa. iv. 5, at Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Solemn Fast, July 26th, 1643." 4to. pp. 30. London, 1643.

^a Neal and Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

PETER SMITH, D. D.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT BARKWAY, IN BARTFORDSHIRE, IN ENGLAND, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

PETER SMITH preached a Sermon from Psal. cvii. 6, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Monthly Fast, May 29th, 1644. This Sermon was printed, 4to. pp. 48. London, 1644. From this Sermon, he clearly appears to have been furnished with considerable parts, to have been well informed, and no mean scholar. Many learned marginal notes are added to the Sermon. It is judicious, and faithfully applied. The author appears to have been well acquainted with the Greek and Hebrew languages. Dr Smith preached also before the Lords, but that Sermon was not printed. He was appointed one of the Select Committee for the examination and approbation of ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. In the year 1645, he was chosen one of the Committee of Accommodation. And he was one of those Divines in the Assembly, who subscribed that proposition, "That Jesus Christ, as King of the church, has himself appointed a church-government distinct from the civil magistrate."

WILLIAM SPURSTOWE, D. D.

MINISTER OF HAMPDEN, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

WILLIAM SPURSTOWE, was the son and heir of William Spurstowe, citizen and merchant of London, but originally descended from the Spurstowes of Spur-a Neal's Hist. vol. iii. chap. ii. vi. and vii.

stow in Cheshire, according to Wood. He received his education in Katherine-hall, Cambridge, of which he was sometime Fellow. Having finished his studies at the University, he entered into the ministerial office, and became minister of Hampden, in Buckinghamshire, in England. In the time of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, and was made chaplain to the regiment of the celebrated Mr John Hampden, in the army under the command of the Earl of Essex.

In the year 1643, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is represented as constantly attending during the session. About that time, he became pastor of Hackney, near London, in the county of Middlesex. He was appointed by the Assembly one of the Select Committee for the examination and approbation of those ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. Wood says, that he was "a grand Presbyterian." He preached some times before the Long Parliament. He was sometime Master of Katherine-hall in Cambridge; but was turned out of his mastership for refusing the engagement, and succeeded by the famous Dr Lightfoot. He proceeded Doctor of Divinity. He went with the Commissioners to the Treaty with King Charles at Newport, in the Isle of Wight, and was one of the Commissioners at the Savoy. He was ejected from Hackney, by the Act of Uniformity, 1662.

Being a sufferer for Nonconformity, he lived about Hackney, exercising his talents in private, as he had opportunity, until his death. He was preserved in the pestilential sickness; but died not long after, in Jan. or Feb. 1666. It is said, that his remains were interred at Hackney, Feb. 8th, 1666. He died in an advanced age.*

Dr Spurstowe was eminently distinguished by his great learning, humility, charity, and a cheerful conversation. He enjoyed a very peaceable disposition. Mr Baxter, in his own Life, frequently speaks of Dr Spurstowe, with a Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. i. 2d edit. Calamy's Acc. and Cont. vol. ii. and Neal's Puritans.

very great respect. He mentions him among those "famous and excellent Divines who attended the Earl of Essex's army, being chaplain to Mr Hampden's regiment." And, it appears from the following circumstance which Mr Baxter records, that he was in the habit of particular intimacy with him. It being agreed by the ministers to draw up a Reply to a paper of the bishops, in answer to their exceptions against the Liturgy, he says, B. 1. p. 334, "This task they also imposed on me, and I went out of town, to Dr Spurstowe's house at Hackney for retirement; where in eight days I drew up a Reply to their Answer." And probably Dr Spurstowe was one of the brethren, who, he says, "read and consented to it."—There were some Alms-Houses near the church of Hackney, that were his gift. And there was a stone before these houses which had this inscription: "William Spurstowe, D. D. Vicar of the parish of Hackney, out of his pious intention, ordered by his will these six Alms-Houses, for the habitation and dwelling of six poor widows of the said parish, of good life and conversation. And Henry Spurstowe, Esq. and merchant, and brother to the said Dr William Spurstowe, fulfilled his will. Erected and built, in the year 1666."

His Writings.—He was one of the authors of Smectymnuus, of which the reader may see an account, in the Life of Mr Calamy. Dr Spurstowe was also the author of the following Pieces: England's Pattern and Duty in its Monthly Fasts; a sermon preached from 1 Sam. vii. 6, to both Houses of Parliament, 21st July, 1643, at an extraordinary fast. 4to. pp. 31. London, 1643.—England's eminent Judgments caused by the abuse of God's eminent Mercies; a sermon preached from Ezra ix. 13, 14, to the Right Honourable House of Lords, in the Abbey Church at Westminster, at the public thanksgiving, Nov. 5, 1644. 4to. pp. 31. London, 1644.—Fast sermon before the House of Commons, 24th June, 1646.—The Magistrate's Dignity and Duty; a sermon from Psal. lxxvii. 2. Oct. 30, 1653, before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the city of London. London, 1654.—

Death and the Grace no Bar to a Believer's Happiness; a sermon from Psal. xvii. 15, at the funeral of Lady Honor Vyner, July 10th, 1656. London, 1656.—A Funeral sermon for Mr William Taylor of Coleman-street, Sept. 12th, 1661.—The Wells of Salvation Opened; or, A Treatise discovering the nature, preciousness, and usefulness, of the Gospel-Promises, and Rules for the right Application of them; a small book. pp. 295. London, 1655, and the second edition, London, 1659.

This excellent Treatise contains the substance of several sermons. Edward Calamy's imprimatur is prefixed to it. In the Preface, the author says, "The Promises are the church's store-house, while it is on this side heaven, from whence believers in all ages may be filled with comfort, as every eye is with new light that beholds the sun. So that there is still a great opportunity for the ministers of God to put their sickle into this harvest; and an encouragement also to believers to take hold of all helps and advantages that may be afforded them for the clearing of their knowledge, and the quickening of their affections, in the daily use and application of the promises. And if to either, or both of these ends, this small Tract may in the least conduce, I shall seek no other recompence from thee than that I may have an interest in thy prayers, both for an encrease of grace, and of abilities, whereby I may be made more serviceable to the glory of his Name unto whom all ought to live."

A Practical Treatise of the excellency and right use of the Gospel-Promises. London, 1658.—The Spiritual Chymist: or, Six Decads of Divine Meditations on several subjects; a small book. pp. 260. London, 1666, and 1668.—The Wiles of Satan; in a Discourse on 2 Cor. ii. 11. Also a small piece.

EDMUND STAUNTON, D. D.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT KINGSTON UPON THAMES, PRESIDENT OF CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, OXFORD, AND A MEMBER OF THE VENERABLE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

EDMUND STAUNTON was born at Woburne in Bedfordshire, England, in the year 1600. He was descended from the ancient family of the Stauntons in Bedfordshire. His father, Sir Francis Staunton, had several sons, of whose education he was peculiarly careful, while he left them good temporal estates also. He reckoned, that wisdom, or learning, is good with an inheritance, Eccl. vii. 11. He accordingly trained up his children in learning, not only that it might be an ornament to them, but also that they might thereby be serviceable to the church or commonwealth. This Edmund, who was one of the youngest, when instructed in grammar-learning, was sent early to Oxford University, and admitted into Corpus Christi College. Here he applied himself very closely to study, and made extraordinary proficiency in learning. And he obtained such applause, that while he was an under graduate, he was chosen a probationer fellow in that college before eighteen of his seniors.

When he was about eighteen years of age, he fell dangerously sick, and was much exhausted, and near unto death before his disease was understood; until a skilful physician found that it was a pleurisy, and ordered opening a vein. A surgeon was immediately sent for, but could not readily be found. At length the messenger brought him from a tavern, but he could not perform his work. He struck the patient's arm twice, but no blood came. In this mournful posture, the sottish swinish surgeon left his patient all night. When he had slept himself sober, he came the next morning very early, and knocked at the college gate. Upon this being opened, he ran immediately to Mr Staunton's chamber, and asked if he was yet alive. Upon finding him alive, he speedily opened a vein in his arm, which bled freely; - and the patient, though half dead, soon recovered, and became healthy.— Here we may observe, that through the drunkenness of the surgeon, this celebrated person's life was in imminent danger.—This part of our narrative clearly discovers the very awful and dangerous consequences of the sin of drunkenness, with the sottish and swinish nature of that evil, which is full of deadly poison.

The subject of this Memoir was also another time as remarkably preserved from being drowned. Soon after he had commenced Bachelor of Arts, he went into the water alone to wash himself, and not being able to swim, he fell into a deep, where he could feel no bottom; but by the Providence of God he was remarkably delivered. He took hold of a little turf of grass by the side of the bank, by the means of which he climbed up, and was saved under God, and by his Providence.

These remarkable and merciful deliverances were preparatory to that good work of grace, which, about this time, the Author and Finisher of faith began in him. These dangerous circumstances wherein he was, with the wonderful deliverances from them, led him to serious thoughts with regard to his spiritual and eternal state, to close self examination and fervent prayer.

I shall give the account of this in his own words, as found with Mr Mayo, his Biographer, who says, that he had this account in a manuscript under his own hand. "About the year 1620, I had many sad and serious thoughts concerning my spiritual and eternal state. Then upon the advice of Dr Barcroft, I bought Brinsley's Watch, the second part; where the sins against the Commandments are set down in order, and I fell upon the work of examination; wherein this seems remarkable, that, reading over the several sins there mentioned, my heart (such was the blindness and deceitfulness of it) cried not guilty of any one of them: Whereupon I began to suspect my heart, and calling upon God to enlighten mine eyes, and discover my sins to me, and then reading them over again, I judged myself guilty, very guilty, even of most of the sins there set down and enumerated. After this I lay about two months under a spirit of bondage, being full of fears and inward trouble, so that many times I durst not close mine eyes in the night lest I should awake in hell. I thought every night the devil would come for me, and fetch me away; but anon, the Lord was graciously pleased to shine upon me, and this remarkable passage I shall never forget:—That, being one evening at prayer, all alone in the dark, I remember the chamber well in Corpus Christi College, and the corner of the chamber, I was very earnest with God for the manifestation of his love to my soul, and the assurance of pardon for my sins; and at length I brake out into these words, or words to this purpose; Lord, I will not go out of thy presence; I will not go off from my knees till thou speakest comfort to me;—whereupon I was immediately filled with a strong persuasion of the love of God to my soul, and with joys unspeakable and full of glory.”

From this period, the study of the holy Scriptures was his peculiar delight; and he applied himself closely to the diligent reading of them, and to the study of divinity, and determined upon the work of the holy ministry. When he commenced Master of Arts, his father gave him the choice of the three learned professions, a Lawyer, a Physician, or a Preacher. The last of these was his choice. And he told his father, “that he had for some time past inclined his studies that way, and that he esteemed the turning of souls to righteousness to be the most desireable work in the world, and that it would have the greater reward hereafter, though the other callings were like to bring in more wealth and honour here.” His affectionate father did make no opposition to his good design, but rather encouraged his pious resolution. He first preached on the Lord’s day afternoon at Witney in Oxfordshire, about six months, and had here his first fruits unto Christ, as Paul had in Achaia, 1 Cor. xvi. 15, being successful in winning souls to him. Here his labours were so acceptable, that people flocked from all parts to hear him. This was not pleasant to the incumbent, who occupied the more time in reading prayers, that Mr Staunton might have the less time for preaching, and then left the church ; but none followed his example except his clerk, whom he would not suffer to read the Psalm. Mr Staunton had preached some time from that text, Buy the truth, and sell it not, Prov. xxi. 23.—Upon which the incumbent, when he met any coming into the church as he went out, would say, with a sneer, “What, are you going to buy the truth?” His continuance at Witney was very uncertain, and he had great opposition from the minister of the place ; accordingly he removed, and became minister of Bushey in Hertfordshire. Here he had a welcome reception, especially from those who had any savour of religion. Here he preached and catechised on the Lord’s day, and at other times, with great success ; and many attended his ministry, not only the inhabitants of Bushey, but also those who dwelt at Watford, and other adjacent places. A respectable minister says, “That little time which Edmund Staunton spent in Bushey was not without good success—many persons, in my own hearing, having acknowledged his ministry to be the means of their conversion.”

About this time, he married the daughter of one Mr Scudamore of Watford, by whom he had one daughter. But when he had been about two years in Bushey, Dr Seaton, of Kingston upon Thames, in Surrey, wishing to have this living, and either making or finding a flaw in his title, soon dispossessed him of it. Dr Seaton’s Attorney, liking the ingenuity of Mr Staunton, proposed an exchange, to which both parties agreed. Mr Staunton preferred work to wages, and complied the more readily with this proposal, because his opportunities of service would be greater at Kingston. He reckoned his opportunities of doing good his greatest riches. But when Dr Seaton had obtained Bushey, he would not part with Kingston ; but either Mr Staunton must be his Curate, or not go there. Mr Staunton related this to Dr Seaton’s Attorney, who, abhorring such baseness, threatened to find a flaw in his title to Bushey.—And many of the inhabitants of Kingston, who greatly esteemed Mr Staunton’s ministry, so worked the Doctor, that he soon resigned, and Mr Staunton took his place at Kingston upon Thames, in the county of Surrey. Here he continued about twenty years, endeavouring to fulfil the ministry which the Lord had given him. And being filled with zeal for the truth, he discharged the duties of his office with great diligence and faithfulness. He preached twice on the Lord's day, and catechised the younger and ignorant sort of people, teaching them also from house to house, though the town was large and populous. He also set up a weekly lecture, which was supplied by several eminent ministers in their turns. By these means, together with his holy and exemplary life, he was instrumental in working a general reformation in the town, both among magistrates and people. He was loved by all the godly, and feared by the wicked. The good seed then sown did spring up in the place long. And the reformation here was not wholly external; for when he left that place in the year 1648, there were thirty persons who gave him a paper, subscribed by themselves, in which they owned him as their spiritual father; and doubtless, many more could have added their names to the list.

He seems to have been very successful this way. When preaching once at Warborough, near Oxford, one person of the congregation was so affected with his first prayer, that he ran to his own house, (which was at a short distance) and told his wife, that she should make herself ready and come to church, for there was one in the pulpit who prayed like an angel, so as he never heard the like. The woman hastened away with her husband; and God so ordered, that this sermon proved a mean of her conversion, and she proved afterward a serious and eminent Christian.

As a preacher, he was very plain, affectionate, and practical. He found, by much and long experience, that a plain way of preaching was most effectual to the ends for which that ordinance was appointed; and therefore he constantly used it, even in the College and University. He could easily have appeared in another strain; but he preferred the work of his Master, and the advantage of immortal souls, unto every other consideration. And he was so affectionate, that he would not only impart the gos- pel, but also his very soul, to his hearers. Some say, that the life of preaching lies in the application; and here, Mr Mayo says, he was indeed ever most lively. He was called the Searching Preacher.—This I have observed, says Mr Mayo, his Biographer, “That in every sermon, he would speak something still by way of trial and examination, ever and anon he would have his marks of distinction between the precious and the vile, the sincere person and the hypocrite.” This story he tells himself, “That having suspicion of one man in his parish, who made a great profession of religion, and often thinking of him in his distinctions; that very person afterward came to him, and said, you will never leave distinguishing, till you distinguish me into hell.” And he applied himself with all diligence to confirm his people in the truth, and to arm them against all false doctrines. He often said, that he was afraid to hear that rebuke from Christ another day, “Thou wicked and slothful servant.” When he visited his friends, if they did not ask him to preach, he offered. And he would say, “Is there no work here for a preacher?”

Upon the death of his first wife, he married a second, by whom he had many sons and daughters. Ten of these were buried in one grave, in the parish church of Kingston, on whom he laid a fair stone, with this epitaph fairly engraven on it:

“Here lie the bodies of Francis, Richard, Mary, Matthew, Mary, Richard, Edmund, Edmund, Sarah, Richard:

Children,

whom the Lord graciously gave to.

EDMUND STAUNTON, D. D.

Late Minister of Kingston-upon-Thames, now President of C. C. C. in Oxford,

By MARY his Wife,

Daughter of Richard Balthrope, Esq.

Servant to the late Queen Elizabeth.

Ten children in one grave! a dreadful sight:

Seven sons, and daughters three, Job's number right.

Childhood and youth are vain, death reigns o'er all,
Even those who never sinn'd like Adam's fall.

But why o'er all? in the first man ev'ry one Sinned and fell, not he himself alone.
Our hope's in Christ the second Adam; HE Who saves the elect from sin and misery.

What's that to us poor children? 'tis our creed,
God is a God to the faithful and their seed.
Sleep on, dear children, never more to wake, Till Christ doth raise you, and to glory take."

He left only one son living at his death.

In the year 1635, when the Book of Sports came out, he was suspended for not reading it, as many more were. He choosed rather to lose his place, than to give countenance to such an abominable practice. During his suspension, he took his degree of Doctor in Divinity at Oxford, which, he says, he did to put the greater honour upon his sufferings. His exercise was greatly applauded. But there were several Doctors in the University whose fingers itched to deal with him, because he was a Puritan; and a country minister, among whom was one, who was so miserably nonplust by Dr Staunton in the disputation, that the auditors hissed him, and called for a candle, that the Doctor might see his arguments. Doctor Staunton took particular notice of this, with thanksgiving, ascribing all the glory to God; and making use of that text, him "that honoureth me, I will honour." God gave him liberally in that hour what he should speak, to the confusion of his enemies. And at this time also, he preached in the University, from Mark viii. 36, when he was signally countenanced from heaven, and the sermon made very successful in doing good.

When the Assembly of Divines was called at Westminster, Dr Staunton was chosen to be a member of that venerable assembly; and he was much esteemed there. He was several times called upon to preach before the Parliament, and his sermons were ordered to be printed. He was also appointed one of the six morning-preachers in Westminster-abbey.

In the year 1648, when the Visitors appointed for the University of Oxford discharged Mr Newlin from the headship of Corpus Christi College, Dr Staunton was constituted President, and succeeded him. He continued here above twelve years, till he was ejected for non-conformity by the King's Commissioners, at the restoration, 1660.—While he was President of that College, his whole deportment was very exemplary. He first put in execution all the statutes, which were most conducive to the advancement of religion and learning, and was often present at lectures and other exercises to encourage the studious, and reprove the negligent. He set up a divinity-lecture every Lord's day, early, in the College-chapel, for exercising the senior students, and initiating them into the holy ministry. He constantly catechised the juniors publicly every Saturday, and preached once or twice every Lord's day, to the edification of many, beside his constant course in the University-church and College-chapel. And, in compassion to the souls of men, he often preached in the country, for which he rather sought opportunities than declined them. And one of the impropriations belonging to the College, about seven miles distant, having but a small stipend, before his time, not sufficient for the external subsistence of a minister, he first went himself, and afterward desired some of the senior Fellows to go over by course, and preach unto the people, which they readily complied with.—When the College affairs called him abroad into remote places, he was always ready to embrace every opportunity of doing good to the souls of mankind. If his business required his stay one day or two in any place, he seldom departed without preaching to the people.—He had a weekly meeting at his own lodgings for prayer and spiritual conference, consisting of college-members and others, wherein he bore a principal part; bringing forth out of his richly furnished store of experimental knowledge, things both new and old.—He was constantly present at the public worship in the chapel, morning and evening, to observe and reprove those who were remiss. And when he sat at meat in the College-hall, he always introduced whole-some discourse, tending to the instruction of those who were present. Spiritual discourse was his meat and drink : His heart taught his mouth, and added learning to his lips. When a portion of the holy Scriptures was read at dinner, which was the custom there at that time, that all might feed their souls while they were refreshing their bodies ; and if there were any difficult places in it, he either propounded them to the Fellows who sat at table with him, for explanation, or performed the task himself. If the chapter read afforded ground for practical observations, it gave great pleasure to the godly to see and hear, how he applied the great things of God's law, and raised the mind to some heavenly contemplation. —He was very attentive to introduce such only into the College as discovered some signs of saving grace, or at least such as were docile, apt to learn, and inclinable to that which is good. Accordingly, when any scholar's place became vacant, and many candidates appeared for it, he desired them, some time before the election, to attend him at his lodgings, where he examined them privately, and procured also testimonials concerning them, from such as knew them ; and if, after examination, such a number of electors as was requisite could not agree upon one of them, when, in that case, the election devolved upon him, he always let piety have the honour to turn the scale, if there was an equality, or near it, in other respects. It gave him great pleasure to see parts, learning, and piety, grow together : and indeed they are a happy conjunction ; especially in gospel ministers, whose work it is " to make manifest the savour of the knowledge of Christ in every place," 2 Cor. ii. 14. And in such, learning without grace, is like a ship without ballast ; the least blast of applause is ready to drive him upon the quick-sands of pride, or upon the rocks of opposition to Christ and to his truth, to his own ruin. Dr Staunton's labour here was not in vain in the Lord : By means of his vigilant care, prudent government, and pious example, religion and learning flourished remarkably in this

College; and many who were educated under his care, became learned, pious, and useful men. Among these was Mr Joseph Allein, minister of the gospel at Tawnton, in Somersetshire, and who was a great comfort to this holy man, while he continued in the College; and he was revived to hear, that he proved so eminently pious and useful in the church of God.

When he was discharged from the College, in 1660, he left Oxford, where he had sown much precious seed, and watered it well with his prayers and tears. His departure was very like that of Paul from Ephesus, Acts xxi. And recommending himself unto divine Providence to fix the bounds of his habitation, he went first to Rickmansworth in Hertfordshire, where he was well received by persons of all ranks, as a minister of Jesus Christ. His chief design was to settle an able minister there; but his best endeavours were ineffectual. However he found the way to that pulpit himself;—but because the entrance was narrower than in some other places, he sought out a wider door and more effectual. He preached round about that country, and in the adjacent ones, though an old man, and somewhat infirm, spending and being spent in the service of his great Master, till the Uniformity Act imposed a general silence upon the Non-conformists, August 1662. After this he was not willing to be idle; for he observed a day of fasting almost every week, either in his own family, or that of some other godly minister or Christian friend. On such occasions, he endeavoured both to humble himself for his own sins, and on account of the abominations which prevailed in the midst of the land—See Ezek. ix. 4. And he discovered such a brokenness of spirit and dissolved soul, as those present could not readily forget. He then employed some hours in the word and in prayer often on these extraordinary occasions. His wife becoming infirm, he took apartments in a family at some distance, where he was very useful, so long as he lived there, as there was a church in that house. The savour of the knowledge of Christ, and the sense of the power of the word to come, were deeply impressed upon the minds of the inhabitants, during his abode with them. From thence he removed to another family near St. Alban's, in which town he was instrumental in correcting some extravagances. His frequent removals seem to have been designed with a view of doing more extensive service and good in the church of Christ. His last removal of this kind was to a place called Bovingden, a little village in Hertfordshire, famous in history, because of this eminent Divine living some time, and dying there. Here he had an offer of all accommodations gratis. He accepted the offer, but what he saved this way he expended in charity; particularly in the distribution of religious books in that village, and the adjacent places. He also gave some part in money to the poor. Here he attended daily to the duties of the family, and was very careful in the instruction of its members. He enjoyed much retirement in this place, an object which he loved dearly; and had he been born for himself alone, he would have chosen this always, as many worthy men have done, giving retirement the preference to the greatest preferments in church or state. But he had not so learned Christ. He often said, "Woe be to me if I preach not the gospel." He preached constantly. He was afraid that the Lord would come and find him idle. He often rode to St. Alban's, where he was useful to many; and once or twice in the year to London and Kingston. And when he could not preach in a church to many, he preached in a chamber to a few; like Paul, at Macedonia, who preached at the river side to a few hearers of the weaker sex, Acts xvi. 13.—Neither the place nor the hearers recommend our preaching in the sight of God. He was naturally of an exceeding good temper and disposition, gentle, affable, and courteous to all; and his natural temper being embellished with the grace of God, made him exceeding amiable, and very useful in all his conversation. His government of the College savoured much more of lenity and mildness, than of sharpness and severity; and yet he kept his College in very good order.

As a Christian, he was much given to self-examination, a duty which is now much neglected by many. He was very careful to ascertain his evidences for heaven; of which we shall give a specimen here to a believer on the Son of God: He had the witness in himself, 1 John v. 10, particularly effectual calling; which is accounted a good evidence for heaven, as appears from Rom. viii. 30. 2 Pet. i. 10. Change of company; choosing the society of the godly, and shunning the company of the wicked, Psal. i. 1. xxvi. 4, 5. cxix. 115. Acts ix. 26. Universal obedience to all God's commands, Psalm cxix. 6. cxxxix. 23, 24. Love to the godly as such, 1 John iii. 14. Sincerity; desiring more to approve his heart to God, than his ways to men: aiming more at God's manifestative glory than his own profit, or the applause of others, 2 Cor. i. 12. Kindly meltings of heart, and deep mournings for sin, upon a sense of God's free love in Christ Jesus, Zech. xii. 10. 2 Cor. vii. 9. 10. Zeal for God, and against sin, John ii. 17. 2 Cor. vii. 11. A love of, and an earnest longing for the appearing of Christ, 2 Tim. iv. 8. Heb. ix. 6. Rev. xxii. 20. And a careful sanctification of the Sabbath, Isa. lvi. 4, 5, and lviii. 13, 14. These evidences of being born again of water and of the Spirit, he says, he found in himself, through the gracious operation of the holy Spirit upon him, if his heart did not deceive him.

He kept a journal of God's favours toward him. This was peculiarly helpful to him in the exercise of grace, and in remembrance of the Divine goodness. We are very ready to forget the word which we hear, the sins which we commit, and the benefits which we receive. A journal or diary is very serviceable to keep us in mind of all these things; and a journal of our sins would soon make an awful catalogue, and might be very serviceable to set them in order before us on days of fasting, and on other occasions, that we might be hereby induced to apply unto the Saviour for pardon and purification.*

Dr Staunton gave himself to prayer, like David. Mr Mayo, his Biographer, says, "He was the most praying

* A very extraordinary journal of sins was found in the pocket of John Morris, who was executed at Chelmsford, in Essex, England, for burglary and robbery, as may be seen in the Cambridge Intelligencer, 25th August, 1798.

Christian that ever I was acquainted with." When he came to lodge at any friend's house, his custom was, after saluting such persons as came in his way, to retire to his chamber, and spend some time by himself, before that any friend could speak with him; and at night again, he shut up himself in his chamber a considerable time before any servant could be admitted. He often said to his godly friends, who came to visit him, "Come, might not we pray together before we part?" It might indeed be said, that prayer was his repast. He often wrestled with God as Jacob did.—He prayed in prayer, says Mr Mayo; and he generally wept when he made his supplication, both in fellowship with others, and in secret. Mr Mayo says, that he had the following passage under his own hand:—"The glory be God's; where I have shed one tear in prayer with others, I have, I think, (speaking within compass) shed two in secret betwixt God and mine own soul." He ordinarily performed this duty kneeling, even when he was almost overwhelmed by the multitude around him. He said, "The humblest gesture, as well as spirit, became the duty of prayer; and that he knew no way of wrestling with the Almighty, like that of lying at his feet, and prostrating ourselves before him.

He was a very strict observer of the Lord's day. Some have observed, that the sanctification of the Sabbath is one of the first things which a converted person makes conscience of, and that he is no true Christian who is careless with regard to this.—This eminent divine was very watchful over his thoughts, words, and actions, every day, but more especially on this holy day. It was very rare to hear him speak one idle word, or to see him do one unnecessary action, upon the Sabbath day. On account of his strictness in the observation of that day, he was like Joshua the high priest, and his fellows, a man wondered at, Zech. iii. 6. And he was also boldly censured for this by some. Mr Mayo says, that he spent some Sabbaths with him; but alas! he could not keep pace with him: He went from duty to duty, as bees do from one flower to another. From public duty to family duties; from family duty to closet duties, always finding much sweetness and comfort to them all. He used to say, "We must always be good husbands of time, especially of holy time: we must not spend that time, which is not our own, about our own things." He was accustomed to observe private fasts. He often passed whole days in prayer and humiliation, both by himself alone, and in conjunction with his family; especially before the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and when he found any corruption within beginning to prevail, or gain ground. He mentions one particular instance of spiritual pride, which he was greatly in danger of when a young preacher, and found much subdued by means of this humbling exercise. He set one day apart to make application unto God, with fasting, for strength against that sin; "and from that day forward he felt the neck and heart of it was broken," which is his own expression. And it was a common saying of his, "That spiritual pride is the special sin of young ministers." Fasting on such occasions, in this manner, was the ancient and commendable practice of the saints of the Most High; but alas! it is now almost become obsolete. See 2 Sam. xii. 16. Neh. i. 4. Esth. iv. 16. Dan. ix. 3. And yet the strong lusts of our deceitful and desperately wicked hearts will not be cast out, nor subdued otherwise. Our want of true humility is a great loss here. Dr Staunton's Biographer says, that "he was clothed all over with humility:" therefore he engaged more readily in this humble, and humbling exercise. Humiliation attends humility. He was very familiarly acquainted with the holy Scriptures; and, like Apollos the Jew, who was born at Alexandria, Acts xviii. 24, he was mighty in them, and made much use of them. If a good textuary is a good divine, he excelled in this. His memory was instead of a concordance. He could turn with great readiness to almost any text of the holy Scriptures, and he discovered great skill therein. He certainly might be called the Gospel Doctor, as Wickliffe was; because he was chiefly employed in the study of the holy Scriptures, and they were his principal delight. He delighted more in them than the maid in her ornaments, or the bride in her jewels. He carried along with him the New Testament, or the book of Psalms, always. He general portion of the holy Scriptures first on the morning day, which was matter of meditation unto him all day. And if any proper occasion offered in company, he raised useful observations therefrom, or proposed such practical questions, as were most conducive to the instruction and benefit of the hearers. In pursuing this plan, "his speech was always with grace, seasoned with salt," Col. iv. 6. As salt is a noble preservative from putrefaction, so was his gracious speech in company, from the errors and sins which prevail among mankind. As salt on meat draweth out, and drieth up noxious humours, and renders it more fit for digestion, and more wholesome for nourishment: so was his well-seasoned speech to the conversation of every company;—and as he well knew that salt must be rubbed in, and every vacuity filled with it, before it can produce its effects, so he delivered his gracious speeches with much animation and warmth, that they might properly affect the hearts of his hearers, under the divine blessing.^a At night, when he thought of going to bed, he made search for some portion of the holy Scriptures, which was suited to his then present thoughts, and that was the subject of his meditation when awake. So great was his delight in the law of the Lord his God, that he made it the subject of his meditation both day and night. See Psalm i. 1, 2. He seldom wrote any letter, without adding three, four, or more texts of the holy Scriptures, as a postscript; and these were very pertinent to the occasion of his writing, the condition of the person to whom he wrote, or to the times, and providences of God. His Biographer says, that he received many letters from him, subscribed in this manner. And it was his custom when he visited any person, or met with any friend, to recommend some text of the holy Scriptures unto their consideration at parting. "Pray," he would say, "let me have one text of Scripture with you, and think of it when I am gone." He had much zeal for God and for his cause. He was frequently employed in projecting how he might promote the honour and service of God in the world. And he was frequently heard saying to his friends, "Come, what shall we do for God this day? How shall we trade with our talents for the advancement of his glory?" In this, he much resembled the pious Divine, who was educated under his care, Mr Joseph Allein, concerning whom it is recorded, "That he never arose on the morning without some heavenly design of promoting God's glory and the good of souls." Dr Staunton also gave evidence of his eminent zeal for God in sharply reproofing sin. Though he seldom sinned in being angry, yet he was often angry with sin, and reproved it. We shall give one instance, where many might be produced. Supping once at an inn, between Oxford and London, where many fellow-travellers did eat together, and one of these abounded in vain and profane discourse; he spake to him, and laboured to convince him of the evil of sin, and of the curse and wrath of God, which did hang over his head; and, afterward, he unfolded unto him the exceeding riches of God's grace to repenting sinners of mankind, and his readiness to receive them through Christ Jesus. Having pointed out the disease, he discovered also the remedy. Upon this the person became more silent; but what farther effect the reproof produced upon him, we are not informed by the narrative: however, the discovery of the riches of divine grace made upon this occasion, greatly affected a young scholar, who was present. It melted his very heart, under the divine blessing, and was a mean to deliver him from a spirit of bondage, under which he had been during some months.

^a See Dr Staunton's Christian Conference, page 30.

Dr Staunton also excelled in generosity. He devised liberal things, and drew out his soul to the hungry. He was charitable to all men, especially to those who were of the household of faith. He gave liberally to the poor. And "blessed is he who considereth the poor." Psal. xli. 1. While others gathered and heaped up money, he dispersed and scattered his abroad, for the benefit of the poor and needy. His custom was, when he rode abroad, to put as much money into his pocket as he could spare for this purpose; and when he met with any indigent persons, he entered into conversation with them, and upon finding that they were proper objects of charity, he afforded them seasonable relief. In this particular, Dr Staunton's custom resembled that of Cimon, the son of Miltiades, the famous Athenian General, who was much renowned for his liberality as well as for his valour. Cornelius Nepos says, concerning Cimon, that "footmen always followed him with money, that if any one stood in need of his assistance, he might have what he should give him immediately, lest he should seem to deny him, by putting him off."^a Such famous examples recal to our mind what is said, Job xxix. 12, 13, "I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him who had none to help him. The blessing of him who was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." And also, what is related concerning Cyprian, That he never sent away a widow empty. And he often said, "Let not that sleep in thy treasuries which may be a benefit to the poor." And, it is said, that Mr Fox never refused any one an alms, who asked for Christ's sake. Cornelius Nepos says, concerning Cimon, who is mentioned above, that he was possessed of the greatest liberality: "for he was a man of so great generosity, that when he had estates and gardens in many places, he never placed a keeper in them, for the sake of preserving the fruit, lest any should be hindered from enjoying what he possessed at pleasure.—Oftentimes, when he saw any one badly clothed, he gave him his own coat. His supper was so dressed for him every day, that he invited all whom he saw in the market-place, not invited elsewhere, which he omitted to do no day. His faithfulness was wanting to none, his service to none, his estate to none: he enriched many: he buried at his own expense, many poor people when dead, who had not left wherewith they might be buried."^b—And all this may be properly applied to our Author, and much more; for he even excelled Cimon in liberality, as his advantages were far superior.

^a Nep. Cim. 4.

^b Nep. Cim. 2. 4.

He was always ready to give spiritual alms to the poor in spirit, who hungered and thirsted after righteousness, as well as temporal favours to those who were externally indigent. Mr Mayo, his Biographer, says, that "for purse-alms, and spiritual-alms together, I never knew his fellow." He often visited poor and needy families, or called for them as he passed by, and always left somewhat behind him for the benefit of both soul and body. God conferred upon him a competent estate; and by shewing pity to the poor, he did lend to the Lord, Prov. xix. 17, thus honouring him with his substance; accordingly he obliged many by his liberality, as Nepos says of Alcibiades.^a

He also excelled in Christian conference. Both his dexterity and delight herein were great; and as there is a gift of prayer and of preaching, so without doubt there is a peculiar gift of Christian and godly conference. Our Author enjoyed this to a very great degree: His heart was generally inditing a good matter, and his tongue was like the pen of a ready writer. His lips fed many, and did drop as the honey-comb. He always endeavoured to make his discourse profitable to others; especially by turning their merry and idle talk into that which is serious and useful—and their worldly conversation into a heavenly conversation; which he could do very handsomely, without giving offence. As Cornelius Nepos says concerning Conon, the Athenian, that, when the affairs of his countrymen were in a bad condition, and he had heard that his native city was besieged, "he did not seek a place where he might live safely himself, but from whence he might be helpful to his countrymen."^b So Dr Staunton always sought how far he might be helpful to his countrymen, especially by Christian conference. He warned the unruly, comforted the feeble-minded, and instructed the ignorant: even those whom others slighted, and did not reckon worthy of their notice, on account of their meanness and ignorance. He used to say, "That their souls were as precious as the souls of nobles." When he met with any person occasionally, either in the house or by the way, though a stranger, he immediately entered into conversation with such; and would ask what countryman he was, and where he was born—and, if he thought that he was born again: hereby taking occasion to explain the nature and necessity of regeneration, as Christ did, in his conference with Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, John iii. If he met with humbled and burthened souls, or such as were babes in Christ, he treated them suitably, and gently led them to the wells of salvation.

^a Nep. Alcib. 3.

^b Nep. Con. 2.

His patience and cheerfulness, under afflictions, were very remarkable. Mr Mayo says, That he was one of the greatest patterns of patience that the age produced: He was never seen out of humour, nor heard repining, though his troubles were considerable. His cheerfulness under his afflictions was admirable. He thereby much recommended the gospel of Christ, and real religion, unto others. He used to be somewhat merry and cheerful in company ordinarily, that he might the more recommend the ways of God, and the religion of Jesus to bystanders; and it is said that he sometimes had success this way. Suidas informs us, that Macarius, by his pleasant discourses on all occasions, drew many into the ways of God. Dr Staunton greatly lamented the unnatural hearts and divisions among Christians, Upon the whole, what one said with regard to Mr Perkins, may be also applied to Dr Staunton:—"That as his preaching was a commentary on his text, so his practice was a comment on his preaching." And, here we have a shining example among the cloud of faithful and active witnesses, for the imitation of all mankind, in their different stations. Here grace or godliness, and fervour of spirit in serving the Lord, are clearly seen; Here religion and reason meet, and act in conjunction, for the glory of God, and the benefit of mankind; and these complete the man.—For, says an eminent writer, "Religion is as necessary as reason to complete a man: so that you are not men, but beasts, if you do not reverence God's authority, and live in subjection and obedience to him.”“ Let this great and venerable character; this distinguished ornament of his age and country; this divine, eminent for his ability, piety, diligence, and integrity, be often in our view.

The truly ornamental lives of the primitive Christians, and also of our Reformers in later times, were considerable means, in the hand of the divine Spirit, in producing the rapid and extensive spread of Christ's gospel, and advancing his spiritual kingdom among men. And, inattention to the adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things, hath contributed much to reduce practical religion to its present mournful decayed state, where it hath been long professed. If the publication of such ornamental lives shall contribute now, in the divine Spirit, in any degree, to quicken and revive us, as in former times, our end is obtained, and God will be glorified, according to Mat. v. 16.

This eminent servant of Jesus Christ—this burning and shining light, was at last seized, all on one side, with the dead palsy, on the 8th of July, 1671. His speech much failed him, and he afterward spake little and seldom.—A friend coming to visit him, asked how he did. He answered in the words of the holy divinely inspired prophet, “In measure God debateth with me; and in the day of the east wind he stayeth his rough wind, Isa. xxvii. 8.—Some time after, he said to a friend who stood by him, “I neither fear death, nor desire life; but am willing to be at God's disposal.” A remarkable and very comprehensive saying. Like David, “the man after God's own heart,” 1 Sam. xiii. 14, confiding in the grace of God, under the pastoral care of the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the sheep, he feared no evil, though walking through the valley of the shadow of death, Psal. xxiii. 4. He saw the Almighty Redeemer swallowing up death in victory, 1 Cor. xv. 54. The saying is also full of Christian resignation to the sovereign disposing will of Jehovah.

At another time, he expressed the following words, very audibly :—" I know that my Redeemer liveth." And soon after, he repeated Psalm xxxi. 5, in verse,

" Into thine hands, I do commit,
My sp'rit ; for thou art HE,
O thou Jehovah, God of truth,
Who hast redeemed me."

While he had ability, he exhorted those around him, to make sure of heaven in the time of health ; to keep their evidences fair and unblotted ; to remember and keep holy the Sabbath day. He spake with all the fervour of a dying man, and acted like one who earnestly desired to be instrumental of doing good to souls even with his expiring breath, in his last moments. When he could not speak himself, he desired others to read the holy Scriptures to him ; directing to the places which he most desired, which were generally the Psalms. He was either without any pain, or felt very little. In this respect, there was a striking resemblance between Dr Staunton's death, and that of the Rev James Beveridge, Minister of the Associate Congregation of Cambridge, State of New-York, North America.—Mr Beveridge sat up in the bed, and said, " I am a dying man ;—I am dying fast ;—but as to bodily pain, I am free of it. I feel no more of this than you do ; nor is there a man in Barnet, (the place where he died) who is more at ease than I am."—Did you ever witness any thing similar to this ? The resemblance in the deaths of these two eminent servants of Jesus Christ, was not less remarkable with regard to their use of, and their delight in, the holy Scriptures on their death-bed. — Mr Beveridge was chiefly employed for three weeks immediately before his death, in the exercises of prayer and reading the holy Scriptures ; and when he was unable to read himself, he desired others to read in his hearing, directing them to the particular passages, and very often made observations as they went along. And farther, Mr Beveridge, at his departure, with an audible voice, twice repeated that passage in the book of Job, xix. 25, 26, " For I know that my Redeemer liveth, &c."

On the 10th July, Dr Staunton was deprived of the use of speech: He lay four days seemingly in a very comfortable condition, lifting up his eyes and hands toward heaven, with a smiling and cheerful countenance. A little before his departure, when a minister prayed with him, he discovered much affection during the time of the prayer; and when prayer was ended, he took the minister by the hand, and held it fast, expressing his inward joy in God, and thanks to him, by outward signs. He died on the 14th of July, 1671, in the seventy-first year of his age.

His body was interred in the parish-church of Bovingden above-mentioned, under a fair stone, with an epitaph engraven upon it, made by the Rev, Dr Simon Ford, in Latin, English thus:—

“ To the memory of that learned and very pious man,
EDMUND STAUNTON, D. D.
who resigned his soul into the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ, with the greatest peace,
in the 71st year of his age, on the 14th day of July,
in the year of our Lord 1671.”

Mr Mayo says, “His modesty was such, that he never judged any thing he did worthy of the press; yet he consented that his Treatise of Christian Conference should be printed. And, having also by me a manuscript of his, entitled, “A Dialogue between a Minister and a Stranger,” I thought good to print it with the aforesaid Treatise.”

Dr Calamy says, that he published several Sermons preached before the Lord's and Commons;* and his printed Writings which I have seen are:—

* See his Life, by Mayo; Clark's Lives of Eminent Persons, London, 1683, and Wood's Athenæ, Oxon. vol. ii.

1. Rupes Israelis; the Rock of Israel; a Sermon preached from Deut. xxxii. 31, at Westminster, before the House of Commons, at their monthly fast, 24th April, 1644. 4to. London.

2. Phinehas's Zeal in Execution of Judgment: or a Divine Remedy for England's Misery; a Sermon preached from Psal. cvi. 30, before the House of Lords, in Westminster-Abbey, at their solemn monthly fast, 30th Oct. 1644. 4to. London, 1645.

3. A Sermon at Great Milton, from 1 Thess. iv. 14, 9th Dec. 1654, at the funeral of Mrs Elizabeth Wilkinson, late wife of Dr Henry Wilkinson, Principal of Magdalen-Hall, Oxford. Oxon. 1659. 4to.

4. His Treatise of Christian Conference. Lond. 1673.

5. A Dialogue or Discourse between a Minister and a Stranger, about Soul-affairs. London, 1673, and 1774. Both small pieces.

I suppose that he hath some other Sermons extant, which I have not yet seen. I have seen all the above pieces lately, in the county of Surrey, where he laboured many years, except the Oxford Sermon, and in different parts of Scotland. He has a Latin Poem, in Britannia Rediviva, 1660, upon King Charles' Return.

PETER STERRY, B. D.

PREACHER OF THE GOSPEL IN LONDON, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

PETER STERRY was born in the county of Surrey, in England. He received his education in Emanuel-College, Cambridge, where, in the year 1636, he was chosen Fellow; and he continued sometime Fellow of that College. Having finished his studies at the University, he entered into the holy ministry. During the national troubles and confusions, he appears to have been a very zealous and firm advocate in the cause of the Parliament.

In the year 1643, he was appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, for the city of London; and he is said to have given constant attendance during the session. He sometimes preached at Whitehall, and before the Parliament, on which occasions he declared his sentiments with great freedom.—He was afterward one of Cromwell's Chaplains, and he is styled "a high-flown mystical divine." He is said indeed to have been deeply tinctured with mysticism. Mr Baxter observes, that he was intimate with the famous Sir Henry Vane, who was a principal leader in the House of Commons, and one of those singular characters that are seen but once in an age, and was thought to have been of his opinion in religious matters; and that "vanity and sterility were never more happily conjoined." Sir Henry Vane may, perhaps, be ranked in the first class of mystics; yet he possessed a genius far above the level of mankind; and he is said to have spoken like a philosopher upon every subject except religion. Mr Sterry is said to have imbibed his spirit, in religious matters. Sir Benjamin Rudyard said, respecting his obscurity in preaching, that he was "too high for this world, and too low for the other." Mr Erbery includes him in the list of those divines who had the knowledge of Christ in the Spirit, and held forth Christ in the Spirit. He says, "Those men are nearest to Zion, yet are they not come into it. For as every prophet shall one day be ashamed of his vision; yea, prophecy itself shall fail; so it is manifest those men are of a dark and deeper speech than can be easily understood; therefore it is not Zion."

In the year 1654, Mr Sterry was appointed one of the Tryers of ministers. The approbation of public ministers had hitherto been reserved to the several Presbyteries in city and country; but the Protector observing some inconvenience in that method, and being unwilling to intrust the qualification of candidates all over England to a number of Presbyterians only, who might admit none but those of their own persuasion, he contrived a middle way of joining the several parties together, and intrusting the work to certain commissioners of each denomination; men of as known abilities and integrity, he says, as any in the nation. This was done by an ordinance of Council, under the date of March 20th, 1654. Mr Sterry was one of those commissioners, who were commonly called Tryers. Among the commissioners were eight or nine Laymen, the rest were Ministers; all thirty-eight; of whom some were Presbyterians, others Independents, and two or three were Baptists. Any five were sufficient to approve; but no number under nine had power to reject a person as unqualified. In case of death, or removal of any of the commissioners, their numbers were to be filled up by the Protector, Oliver Cromwell, and his Council; or, by the Parliament, if sitting. But some of the Presbyterian divines declined to act in that affair, for want of better authority, and because they were not pleased with some of the company.^a

It is said to be related by Ludlow, that when news arrived of Cromwell's death, Mr Sterry stood up, and desired those about him not to be troubled. "For, said he, this is good news: because, if he was of great use to the people of God when he was among us, now he will be much more so, being ascended to heaven to sit at the right hand of Jesus Christ,—there to interceed for us, and to be mindful of us on all occasions." One observes; "This, if true, was flattery or phrenzy in perfection."

Mr Sterry lived until after the restoration of King Charles II, when he is said to have held a conventicle in London. It has also been remarked, that he and one Sadler were the first who were observed to make a public profession of Platonism in the University of Cambridge.^b

Mr Sterry is said to have been the author of several tracts. I have seen only the following sermons by him: The Spirit's Conviction of Sin opened, in a sermon from John xvi. 8, before the Honourable House of Commons, Fast, Nov. 26th, 1645. 4to. pp. 36. Lond. 1645, and ^a Neal's Puritans, vol. iv. chap. iii.

^b Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

1645.—And The Clouds in which Christ Comes; a sermon from Rev. i. 7, before the House of Commons, Fast, Oct. 27th, 1647. 4to. pp. 56. London, 1648.

JOHN STRICKLAND, B. D.

PASTOR OF THE CHURCH AT EDMUND'S IN NEW SARUM, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JOHAN STRICKLAND was born of, and descended from, an ancient and gentle family of his name in the county of Westmoreland in the north of England. He received his education in Queen's College, Oxford, where he became a Butler, in the beginning of the year 1618, aged seventeen years. He took the degrees of Arts, and entered into the holy ministry. His first preferment was to be chaplain to the Earl of Hertford. In the month of May, in the year 1632, he was admitted Bachelor of Divinity; and in December that same year, Sir John Horner presented him to the Rectory of Middleton, or Pudimore Milton, in Somersetshire. Wood says that he was always Puritanically affected, which is very probable. Upon the commencement of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament, and preached frequently to the members, exciting them, as Wood says, "to proceed in their blessed Cause." He was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is said to have constantly attended. He seems to have been a superadded Divine. He was a Covenanter; and by his fervent zeal for the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, he has incurred the great displeasure of the Royal party. Wood says, that "he prayed several times blasphemously." But Dr Calamy here observes, "He might as well have said he used to come into his pulpit naked, and without a rag of cloaths on; for the one is not more ridiculous to those who knew the man, than the other." Wood says, "that in 1645 or thereabout, he was made Minister of Peter's le poor in London, where he exercised his gifts against the King and his party, and was never wanting to excite the auditors to carry on the said cause.^a Afterward he became pastor of Edmund's Church in Salisbury. He was eminently distinguished for expounding the holy Scriptures, and for being an excellent Causist. About the year 1654, he was constituted an assistant to the commissioners of Wiltshire for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and schoolmasters. On the fatal Bartholomew-day, he was turned out of Edmund's parish in New Sarum, by the Act of Uniformity, for his refusal to conform to the service, ceremonies and corruptions, of the church of England. He continued among his people, and preached to them as he had opportunity, and suffered many ways for his Nonconformity. Wood says he had been informed, that for keeping conventicles in, and near, Salisbury, he was several times imprisoned. The faithful servants of the Lord Jesus Christ have been oftentimes in prison.

He died in the month of October, in the year 1670. He was well in health and dead, in a very short time. He died on the evening of a Lord's day, after he had preached twice, from 2 Pet. i. 11, and administered the Lord's Supper. Finding himself disordered, he made this known to those persons who were about him, and then sat down in a chair and died. His remains were interred on the 25th of Oct. 1670, and accompanied to his grave by a numerous company of his friends, and Dr Calamy says, "His name is remembered with great respect to this day, at Sarum, where his body lies buried in St Edmund's church-yard." The Doctor also says, that Mr Strickland "was really a great Divine, and generally esteemed." He was accounted a most faithful preacher.^a

Mr Strickland has published several sermons.—1. God's Work of Mercy, in Zion's Misery; a sermon preached from Isa. x. 20, before the honourable House of Commons at Margaret's, Westminster, Dec. 27, 1643. 4to. pp. 33. London, 1644.—2. A Discovery of Peace: or, The Thoughts of the Almighty for the ending of the People's Calamities, &c. on Jer. xxix. 11. 4to. Lond. 1644.—3. Immanuel: or, The Church Triumphant in God with us; a sermon preached from Psal. xlv. 7, before the Right Honourable House of Lords, in the Abbey of Westminster, at their public Thanksgiving, Nov. 5th, 1644. 4to. pp. 38. Lond. 1644.—4. Mercy Rejoicing against Judgment: or, God Waiting to be Gracious to a sinful Nation; a sermon preached from Isa. xxx. 18, before the Honourable House of Commons, in Margaret's, Westminster, Fast, Oct. 29th, 1645. 4to. pp. 28. London, 1645.

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. ii. Calamy's Account, vol. ii. p. 755. Cont. vol. ii. p. 865.

In his epistle Dedicatory to the House of Commons, he desires them to attend carefully to the public schools, to reform the Universities, and to plant the Northern counties of England, at Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Northumberland, with able ministers of the gospel; who, by preaching there, and travelling about, would communicate light to those who were living in darkness. Mr Strickland assisted Dr Chambers in writing his apology for the Ministers of the county of Wilts. And, perhaps, he has other writings extant, which I have not seen: but Dr Calamy says, that he did not know of any thing he has printed, beside his sermons before the Parliament.

FRANCIS TAYLOR, B. D.

PASTOR OF YALDING IN KENT, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

FRANCIS TAYLOR, A. M. was sometime Rector of Chapham in the county of Surrey, near London. He was afterward pastor of Yalding in Kent. To one of those places he was presented by Archbishop Laud.

In the year 1643, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is said to have given constant attendance during the session. In that venerable Assembly, he was eminently distinguished by his great learning and moderation. He subscribed the Proposition, That "Jesus Christ, as King of the Church, hath himself appointed a Church government distinct from the civil magistrate." He preached some times before the Parliament; but I have seen only two of these sermons, which are mentioned in their place. His eminent abilities and erudition were most richly displayed in his writings. He wrote the English Annotations upon the book of the Proverbs. He was most peculiarly distinguished for all kinds of Hebrew learning, and the knowledge of Jewish antiquities. He published several very learned and valuable works, and among these a translation of the Jerusalem Targum on the Pentateuch out of the Chaldees into Latin, which he dedicated to the learned Mr Gataker of Rotherhithe. This was accompanied with a Prefatory epistle of the eminently learned Mr Selden to our author. Mr Taylor maintained a learned correspondence with Boetius, Archbishop Usher, and the most celebrated scholars of his time. Among the letters to Archbishop Usher, which are still preserved, there is one from Mr Taylor, dated from Chapham, April, 1635, written in Latin.^a

Our author removed from Yalding and became preacher in Christ's church in the city of Canterbury, where he appears to have died about the time of the Restoration. He left behind him the character of an able Critic, and of a most celebrated Divine. Mr Neal says, that "he was one of the most considerable Divines of the Assembly." Mr Edward Leigh says, that he was "a learned Linguist, and worthy Divine of the Assembly at Westminster."^b

He had a son of the same name, who, though he lost the sight of both his eyes by the small-pox, while he was a student in Cambridge, became a minister of considerable learning, of genuine piety, and of great usefulness.

^a Parr's Life of Usher. Folio. pp. 475, 476. ^b Leigh's Treatise of Religion and Learning. Book vi. chap. i.

Dr Calamy says, that "he had an enlightened mind, though a dark body." But he was ejected from Alphage-Church in Canterbury, for Nonconformity, in 1662; silenced and imprisoned. He was cheerful under all his afflictions. He has left behind him a small book of verses, which is entitled, "Grapes from Canaan; or, the Believer's present Taste of future Glory." In this little book may be read his own views and desires of the heavenly felicity, and also his laudable endeavours to recommend it unto his fellow-creatures.

The father, the subject of this Memoir, has left behind him several very valuable, learned, and pious, writings, to praise him in the gate, and to edify the church of Christ.

1. Faith of the Church of England. 4to. 1641.—2. God's Covenant the Church's Plea; a sermon preached from Psalm lxxiv. 20, before the Honourable House of Commons, at the Solemn Fast, in Margaret's Church at Westminster, Oct. 29th, 1645. 4to. pp. 29. London, 1645.—3. The Danger of Vows Neglected, and the Necessity of Reformation; a sermon preached from Gen. xxiv. 1, before the House of Lords, at a Solemn Fast, in the Abbey-Church, Westminster, May 27th, 1646. 4to. pp. 26. Lond. 1646.—4. God's Glory in Man's Happiness, God's Choice, and Man's Diligence, and on Justification, are small Pieces bound together, 1654.—5. An Exposition of the first nine chapters of the Proverbs, 2 vols. 4to. 1655.

Beside the Pieces mentioned in the Account of the Author's Life, he has written, Opuscula Rabbinica. 1654.—Targum Prius et Posterius in Esteram. 4to. pp. 107. Lond. 1655.—Tractatus De Patribus: Rabbi Nathane Autore. In Linguam Latinam Translatus, Una cum notis marginalibus. 4to. pp. 142. Lond. 1654.—Capitula Petrum. And Leigh, as above-mentioned, says, that he and Dr Boot wrote Examen Præfationis Morini in Biblia Græca de Textus Ebraici Corruptione, et Græci Authoritate. And probably he has other works.*

* Neal's Puritans, vol. iv. Brook's, vol. iii. Calamy's Acc. vol. ii.
VOL. II. 2 C

THOMAS TEMPLE, D. D.

MINISTER OF BATTERSEA, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

THOMAS TEMPLE was brother to Sir John Temple, Master of the Rolls, and one of his Majesty's Privy Council in Ireland. He was M. A. and sometime Fellow of Trinity-College, Dublin. He afterward resided for some time in Lincoln-College, Oxford. Wood says, that he continued not long in Lincoln-College. He was settled first at Winwick in Northamptonshire, then at Battersea, in the county of Surrey. At this last place he was labouring in the year 1639, having Mr Samuel Wells for his assistant. Upon the commencement of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament.

In the year 1643, he was appointed one of the Licensers of the Press for Books of Divinity, and chosen to be one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster; and he is said to have constantly attended during the session. He was appointed one of the Select Committee for the examination and approbation of those ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. In the year 1645, he was chosen one of the Committee of Accommodation. In each of these public and important offices, he was eminently distinguished by his great learning and moderation. In the year 1648, he readily united with his brethren, the London ministers, in their declaration and protestation against the death of the King.

Wood says that he was "a forward preacher; and a frequent preacher before the members of the Long Parliament, and that he has certain sermons in print which he preached before the said members."^a I have seen one of his sermons, which is entitled, Christ's Government in and over his People, from Psalm ii. 6, delivered before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Public Fast, Oct. 26th, 1642. 4to. pp. 50. Lond. 1642. An excellent sermon. I have seen it in London, and in different parts of Scotland.—Dr Temple is said to have been a learned divine; but we have not been able to receive any more information respecting him, nor to say when he died.

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon, vol. i. Neal and Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

CHRISTOPHER TESDALE, A. M.

PASTOR OF HUSBORNE-TARRANT, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

CHristopher TESDALE seems to have been born at Abingdon, a market-town in Berkshire in England; for Wood says “that he was an Abingdon man born.” He received his education in New-College, Oxford, where he proceeded Master of Arts, on the 10th of June, in the year 1618. He entered into the holy ministry, and became Pastor of Husborne-Tarrant, in the county of Southampton. At the commencement of the civil war, he espoused the cause of the Parliament; and in the year 1643, he was chosen a Member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is marked in Mr Neal’s list as constantly attending during the session. He was also a preacher before the Long Parliament.

He has published Hicrusalem: or, A Vision of Peace; a sermon preached from Psalm cxxii. 6, Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their monthly Fast, at Margaret’s in Westminster, Aug. 28th, 1644. 4to. pp. 30. Lond. 1644.^a In his Epistle Dedicatory to the House of Commons, he says:

“Worthy Fathers of your country, It is said of the Ambassadors of the King of Persia, that coming to Athens, the metropolis of learning, in the time of the Seven Wise Men, they desired that each of them would deliver in his sentence that they might report unto their Master the Wisdom of Greece, which accordingly they did, only one of them was silent : which the Ambassadors observing, entreated him also to cast in his symbol with the rest. Tell your Prince, saith he, that there are of the Grecians who can hold their peace. Verily, it had been my wisdom to have altogether held my peace in such an audience, or having once spoken, to have proceeded no farther ; but as this sermon, such as it is, came to the birth by your authority, so your command now is the midwifery to bring it forth ;—I shall then be your remembrancer by restoring the loss of the ear to the eye. Words, we say, are wind, and unless they be taken upon the wing, even while they are flying, and brought to the press, they are gone and lost.—And now, ever honoured Patriots, that I have been God's remembrancer to you, I will be bold to be your remembrancer to God, that the Lord of Peace himself would give you peace always, and by all means, that he would let you see Jerusalem in prosperity, and peace upon Israel, and in recompence of all your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope, he would fill you with length of honourable time here, and with a glorious eternity hereafter.

^a Wood’s Athenæ Oxon, vol. i. 2d edit.

Your's in the Lord, the meanest and lowest of all my Master's servants,

CHRISTOPHER TESDALE.

In the above-mentioned sermon, he says : " The people were able to say, by their own happy experience, that our Saviour Christ taught as one having authority, and not as the Scribes and Pharisees, those dull Doctors of the Law, who were never able to keep Moses's chair warm, but cold sermons made bold sinners." And in p. 23, he says, " Surely God is about some great work, he intends some great blessing to the land ; we trust he will bless our eyes with the happy sight of the King in his beauty, the Lord Jesus upon his glorious throne, with all his holy ordinances about him in their purity and power, that in his time the righteous may flourish, and abundance of peace as long as the moon endureth." And, speaking of fervent prayers with strong cries and tears at the Mercy-seat and the throne of Grace, he says : " A cold suitor begs his own denial ; God will have us Jacobs, before we shall be Israels. " That which is soon gotten, is as soon forgotten.—Though God keep silence sometimes at our prayers, he will not hold his peace at our tears, Psalm xxxix. 12." In the application of the sermon, he makes a motion for a new association : " That zealous prayer, sound counsel, constant resolution, and speedy action, be firmly joined together."—In exhorting his hearers to strive together, as fellow-soldiers, with all their might, for the Faith of the Gospel, he says : " We must even compass Babylon, as the Israelites did Jericho, yet seven times more in one day, and shout against it with a great shout, before the walls will come down, and the angel cry, Babylon is fallen, is fallen."

THOMAS THOROWGOOD, B. D.

RECTOR OF GRIMSTON, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES
AT WESTMINSTER.

THOMAS THOROWGOOD received his education in the University of Cambridge, where he proceeded Master of Arts. He entered into the office of the holy ministry, and was afterward Bachelor of Divinity. On the 9th of July, in the year 1622, he, with several other Cambridge Scholars, was incorporated of the University of Oxford. Wood says, " that they were taken into the bosom of this University."—In the troublesome times of the civil war, Mr Thorowgood espoused the cause of the Parliament, and was called to preach before them, and chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster ; and is represented as constantly attending. In the Ordinance of Parliament for calling an Assembly of Learned and Godly Divines in 1643, he is said to be " Thomas Thorowgood of Massingham," but in the year 1644, he is said to be Rector of Grimston, in the county of Norfolk.

He has published, Moderation Justified, and the Lord's being at hand Improved; a sermon preached from Phil. iv. 5, at Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Solemn Fast, Dec. 25th, 1644. 4to. pp. 33. Lond. 1645.—Jews in America: or, Probabilities that the Americans are of that Race. With the Removal of some contrary reasonings, and earnest desires for effectual endeavours to make them Christian. 4to. pp. 139. Lond. 1650.

It has been said, that the American Indians have called themselves the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel. Mr Thorowgood grounds his conjectures on their own acknowledgment, their rites and customs, and their manner of speech, resembling those of the Jews, and the like.

ANTHONY TUCKNEY, D. D.

MINISTER OF BOSTON, MASTER OF EMANUEL AND ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY, IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

ANTHONY TUCKNEY was the son of Mr Tuckney, Minister of Kirton, about three miles from Boston in Lincolnshire. He was born in Sept. 1599, and educated in Emanuel-College, Cambridge. When he had taken the degree of Master of Arts, he, for some time left the College, and became domestic chaplain to the Earl of Lincoln. But being afterward chosen Fellow of his College, he returned thither, and continued there till after his commencing Bachelor of Divinity. During that time, he was a most diligent and conscientious tutor. He trained up many pupils, who were afterward highly useful both in church and state; and who always retained a grateful remembrance of him. He left the University upon the invitation of the people of Boston, in his native country. Upon their solicitation, he became assistant to the celebrated Mr John Cotton, minister of Boston. He continued in that relation with Mr Cotton, until he removed to America. After Mr Cotton's removal to New England, in the year 1633, Mr Tuckney, who had for some time been Mr Cotton's assistant, became his successor in the pastoral office at Boston. He continued his ministry in that place during a sore visitation of Divine Providence by the pestilence; and he met with some disturbance from the Spiritual courts.

In the year 1643, he was called up to London by the Parliament, to sit in the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He and Mr Coleman were chosen Members of that Assembly for the county of Lincoln. The times being very troublesome and dangerous, during the heat of the war, he took his whole family with him to London, and never returned to dwell in Boston. But, at the desire of the people, he retained his title to the place, until the year 1660, when King Charles the Second came in, and then he resigned it, and Dr Howe succeeded him. After he left the place, he received none of the profits. He was very highly esteemed in the Assembly, and is marked as constantly attending during the session. He was appointed one of the Committee for the examination and approbation of those ministers who petitioned for sequestered places. In 1645, he was chosen one of the Committee of Accommodation. He had a considerable hand in the Assembly's Confession of Faith, and Catechism. It is said, that many of the Answers in the Larger Catechism, and particularly the exquisite exposition of the Commandments, were his, and were continued for the most part in the very words which he brought in.

After he had been some time at London, he was settled minister of Michael-Quern, at the upper end of Cheapside, where he continued till 1648; with the exception, that after he became Master of Emanuel-College, which was in 1645, he spent some months in the year at Cambridge. In 1648, he removed to Cambridge with his family, and was that year Vice-Chancellor of the University. In the year 1653, when Dr Thomas Hill died, Dr Arrowsmith was chosen Master of Trinity-College, and Dr Tuckney was chosen Master of St. John's College.

And he succeeded Dr Arrowsmith as Royal Professor. He was eminently courageous in opposing orders sent by the higher powers. He was a man of great humility; and yet few, if any, ever maintained their authority better than he did in the University when Vice-Chancellor, and in the College of which he was Master. Many gentlemen and ministers sent their sons to that Seminary of learning merely on his account, that they might have the benefit of his instruction.

After the Restoration of King Charles the Second, he was one of the Commissioners at the Savoy, but had no hope of any accommodation upon seeing how affairs were conducted. Before the time for the conferences was expired, he received a letter from the King, desiring him to resign both his Mastership and Professorship, which if he did, his Majesty, in consideration of his great pains and diligence in discharging the duties of his office, would oblige his successor to give him sufficient legal security, to pay him one hundred pounds yearly during his natural life. The Doctor thought that it would answer no good end to contend with the Court in that juncture, and that it would not be long that he could keep his places as things were then managed; and accordingly, upon receiving the King's letter, with another accompanying it from the Earl of Manchester, he resigned both his places. The annuity which was promised to him was punctually paid him, for several years, by Dr Gunning, who succeeded him. Wood, speaking of this annual allowance to Dr Tuckney, which was given by Dr Gunning, says, "Which act of his, being excellent and singular, is here remembered to his everlasting fame."

Dr Tuckney is classed among the Ministers, Masters of Colleges, &c. who were ejected or silenced after the Restoration, by, or before, the Act of Uniformity, in Dr Calamy's Account. Dr Tuckney, upon leaving the University of Cambridge, retired with his family to London, and lived in St. Mary-Axe, and continued there until the plague in 1665, preaching sometimes in his own house, and occasionally in the families of several friends.

In the time of the sickness he lived at Colwick Hall near Nottingham. There he was not long after troubled and confined; but it was in a gentleman's house, where he was treated very civilly, and within a few months discharged. After the Five-Mile-Act came out, he shifted about in several counties. He removed to Oundle in Northamptonshire, and from that place to Warmington, in the same county; and after the dreadful fire of London in 1666, in which his Library was burned, he removed to Stockerson, in Leicestershire; and thence to Tottenham, near London, and from that, in 1669, he removed to Spittle-yard, London, where he died in the month of Feb. 1670, in the seventy-first year of his age. And he has left behind him the character of an eminently pious and learned man, a genuine friend, an indefatigable student, a candid disputant, and an earnest promoter of truth and godliness. It was his custom to have a sermon preached in the chapel of Emanuel, and of St. John's College, the morning after every public commencement, by one who had been of the College. This laudable custom was carefully observed many years.

Dr Tuckney has several Writings, which praise him in the gate. He published some small Pieces himself: The Balm of Gilead for the Wounds of England; a sermon preached from Jer. viii. 22, at Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at the Solemn Fast, Aug. 30th, 1643. 4to. pp. 43. Lond. 1643. This sermon was again printed in a small size, Lond. 1654.—Death Disarmed; and the Grave Swallowed up in Victory; a sermon preached from 1 Cor. xv. 55, at Mary's in Cambridge, Dec. 22d, 1653, at the funeral of Dr Thomas Hill, with an Account of his Life and Death, and two sermons more from the same text, preached afterward in the same place; small size, pp. 135. Lond. 1654.—None but Christ; a sermon from Acts iv. 12, preached at Mary's in Cambridge, on the Commencement Sabbath, July 4th, 1652; to which is annexed, An Inquiry after what hope may be had of the Salvation of Heathen, Jews, Infants, Idiots, &c. now under the Gospel. Small size, pp. 143. London, 1654.—A Good Day Well Improved, in five sermons, from Acts ix. 31, and a sermon from 2 Tim. i. 13. 1656. And after his death, were published forty sermons of his upon several occasions, 4to. pp. 698. Lond. 1676. And his Prælectiones Theologicæ; Theological Lectures and Exercises, in the University, 4to. Amsterdam, 1679. In Latin. These Lectures, in which there is a very fine Dissertation against propagating religion by the sword, were refused a Licence in England, and therefore were printed in Holland.^a

THOMAS VALENTINE, B. D.

MINISTER OF CHALFONT GILES, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

THOMAS VALENTINE was a great sufferer for truth, in the cause of Nonconformity. He felt the shocking oppression and cruelty of the ruling prelates in England, in his time. In the year 1633, when the King, by the recommendation of Laud, republished the Book of Sports, for the encouragement of recreations and pastimes on the Lord's day, he and his brethren felt the iron rod of their tyrannical oppressors. This profane book opened a flood-gate to every manner of licentiousness, and was the unhappy instrument of very great oppression to many eminently pious and learned divines, and to great numbers of his Majesty's best subjects. The ruling prelates, though not authorized by law, required the clergy to read that book publicly before the congregation. The Puritans refused to read it, and were suspended, and subjected to great sufferings, for their refusal. Dr Calamy informs us, that Mr Valentine was suspended by Sir John Lamb, Dean of the Arches, for not reading the Book of a Calamy's Account, vol. ii. Cont. vol. i. Neal's Puritans, vols. iii. and iv.

Sports. And we are also told, that Mr Wroth and Mr Erbery from Wales, Mr James from Gloucestershire, and Mr Thomas Valentine, minister of Chalfont St. Giles, with many others, were brought from various parts of the country, and prosecuted in the High Commission.^a Mr Valentine was afterward appointed one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is represented as constantly attending during the session. He has some sermons extant; which he preached before the Long Parliament. Dr Calamy says, that he was "a very popular and taking preacher." He was ejected from Chalfont St. Giles, in the county of Bucks, by the Act of Uniformity.^b

His Writings.—A sermon from Zeph. iii. 8, before the House of Commons, at their Fast, Dec. 28th, 1642. 4to. Lond. 1643.—2, "A Charge against the Jews, and the Christian World, for not coming to Christ, who would have freely given them Eternal Life;" a sermon before the Peers, from John v. 40, at Westminster Fast, 26th May, 1667. Lond. 1647.—3. "Christ's Counsel to Poor and Naked Souls;" a sermon from Rev. iii. 18, before the Commons, Fast, 29th Sept. 1647. Lond. 1647.

From what Mr Valentine has published to the world, he appears to have been a very sweet evangelical preacher, and a divine of considerable talents and learning. I have seen his sermons in different parts of Scotland.

RICHARD VINES, A. M.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT WEDDINGTON, AND MASTER OF PEMBROKE-HALL, CAMBRIDGE.

RICHARD VINES was born at Blason, in the county of Leicester, in England, about the year 1600. He was educated in Magdalen College, Cambridge, where he continued a student some years, and commenced M. A. Dr Fuller, in his History of the University of Cambridge, says, "every year this House produced some eminent scholars, as living cheaper, and more private, freer from town-temptations by their remote situation." It produced an eminent scholar indeed, when it produced Mr Vines. Here he displayed much quickness of wit, and pregnancy of parts. And it was observable in him, that while these rendered him lively and acute, yet he was never wicked nor profane. He was not given to any extravagance in his youth. He studied hard, and made great proficiency. Having finished his courses at the University, he was chosen to be schoolmaster at Hinckley, a small town in Leicestershire, on the borders of the county toward Warwickshire. "A profession wherein many a good minister had been," says Dr Fuller. And Jacombe says, "I could instance in rare instruments of God's glory, in the church of Christ, who began with that employment; but Mr Vines is enough to himself, and may rather give than take credit from any."

^a Brook's Puritans, vol. i. Introduction, pp. 77, and 78.
^b Calamy's Account, vol. ii.

From being schoolmaster at Hinckley, he was called to be minister of the gospel at Weddington, a private village, in Warwickshire. Here he laboured very diligently and faithfully; and his ministrations were attended by many from adjacent places. Caldcot, a small parish near Weddington, falling vacant, was given to him also. Beside, at the request of several friends, when preaching the gospel of Christ was a rare commodity, and much desired, he undertook a lecture at Nuneaton, a large market-town near him, in the county of Warwick, and about seven miles from Coventry. This lecture was much frequented, and carried on with great profit to the hearers, from whom he had high applause. Both ministers and private Christians travelled many miles to hear him. But, at the commencement of the civil war, in the year 1642, he was driven from his house and charge, and forced to take shelter in Coventry, with many others, a city in Warwickshire, situated ninety miles north-west of London. Here he was not idle; but set up a morning-lecture, with other ministers. And the inhabitants were so affected with his ministry, that they earnestly desired him to continue with them. And indeed "it is a pity that great lights should burn out in little rooms," says Jacombe.

When the Parliament called an Assembly of Divines in 1643, he was nominated a Member of it, chosen to be one of their number for Warwickshire, and deputed to have a share in that great and important work performed by this Venerable Assembly. And Jacombe says, in his sermon at Mr Vines' death, "It was a mercy to the church of God that he was so, for how much service he did there in the matter of church-government, may safely be concealed, scarcely be expressed without offence." And Fuller, in his Worthies of England, says, he was "the champion of the party in the Assembly, therefore called their Luther." Upon his coming to London, he was chosen to preach some times before the House of Commons at their Solemn Fast; and was much esteemed for his sound judgment, masculine and nervous oratory. He had then a call to Clement's Danes, a very large and considerable parish, became minister there, and his preaching is said to have been highly beneficial to many souls, and several persons of quality were his constant hearers. Essex-house being in that parish, the Earl of Essex was his frequent hearer, and continued his true friend until his death. After some time, by the solicitation of the Earl of Essex, he resigned that place and removed to Walton in Hertfordshire. He afterward accepted an invitation to Lawrence Jewry, London; where his excellent talents were still employed in promoting the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, and the salvation and happiness of his people. Many flocked to his ministry, and his labours were crowned with remarkable success. While pastor of Lawrence Jewry, he was chosen one of the weekly lecturers at Michael's, Cornhill. Upon the death of the Earl of Essex, the Parliament appointed a public funeral for him, which was attended with great solemnity in Peter's church, Westminster, when Mr Vines preached his funeral sermon to a very great audience, which was composed of persons of high distinction.

In the year 1644, Mr Vines was appointed Master of Pembroke-hall, Cambridge, by the Earl of Manchester; and, it is said, that he was a most industrious and useful man in his College, having both much learning, and the genuine spirit of government. It has been affirmed, that few persons were better qualified for that exalted station. There he earnestly promoted true religion and sound literature to the utmost of his power, and restored the college to a very flourishing condition, until, in the year 1649, he was turned out for refusing the engagement, which was a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence to many conscientious ministers in England, at that time.—He was appointed by the Parliament one of the Assistant Divines at the Treaty of Uxbridge. Whitlocke, speaking of this treaty, says, “that while Dr Steward and Dr Sheldon argued very positively, that the government by bishops was of Divine Right; Mr Vines and Mr Henderson argued as positively, but more moderately, to the contrary, and that the government of the church by Presbyteries was of Divine Right.”^a

Mr Vines was also chosen a member of the Committee of Accommodation, and was chairman at their meetings. On the subject of a general accommodation of all parties, he wrote an excellent letter to Mr Baxter, discovering his mild and accommodating spirit. In the year 1645, he was one of the Committee of learned Divines appointed by the Assembly to prepare the Confession of Faith. In 1648, he was appointed, by order of the Parliament, one of the Assistant Divines at the Treaty of the Isle of Wight; on which occasion he was greatly applauded by his own party, particularly for proving the sufficiency of Presbyterian Ordination. During the treaty, he had much converse and some disputation with the King. His Majesty highly valued him for his learning and ingenuity, and seldom spoke to him without touching his hat, which Mr Vines returned with most respectful language and gestures.

^a Whitlocke's Mem. pp. 119, 123, 126, as with Brook.

When the King was under sentence of death, Mr Vines, Mr Calamy, and other ministers in London, presented their duty to his Majesty, with their humble desires to pray with him, and perform other services, if he would be pleased to accept them. The King returned them thanks for their kind offers and love to his soul, hoping that they and all other good subjects would, in their addresses to God, be mindful of him; but he declined the services which they offered, having chosen Dr Juxon, in whose abilities to administer comfort to him, he could confide.—About the year 1653, Mr Vines was appointed, by order of the Parliament, one of the Divines to draw up the Fundamentals, which were to be presented to the House.

Messrs Ashe and Calamy, who were intimately acquainted with Mr Vines, say, that to their knowledge, he was a hearty Presbyterian. And Dr Fuller classes him among those Divines, who in their judgment favoured the Presbyterian discipline, or in process of time were brought over to embrace it.—He was a very solid, judicious, and orthodox divine. He was mighty in the Scriptures, and an interpreter one of a thousand. He was a great champion in controversy, and eminently distinguished for giving a mortal wound to error. In his powerful and spiritual ministry, he insisted very much upon the almighty doctrine of justification, which he had thoroughly studied; greatly debasing man and exalting the Lord Jesus Christ, and his finished righteousness. Toward the conclusion of his ministry, he discovered much earnestness, in driving man out of himself unto the Saviour; throwing down all false foundations of the hope of heaven, and warmly recommending the only sure foundation which Jehovah has laid in Zion. He seriously exhorted his hearers to study heart-holiness and a conversation becoming the gospel of Christ. And he knew well how to speak a word in season to wounded spirits.

After a very laborious and highly useful life, Mr Vines, at length, became the subject of painful bodily affliction. He had formerly a very strong constitution; but his strength soon began to abate after he was settled at Lawrence-Jewry. His infirmities rapidly increased. He was much afflicted with pains in his head, which greatly hurt his sight, that he could not see to read the largest print; nor could any glasses help him. But he would not cease from his public labours in the Lord's vineyard. He was firmly resolved both to spend and to be spent in the service of the church of Christ: like a candle which wastes itself, to give light unto others. His voice, at last, became very low. A few days before his death, when he was preaching at Gregory's church, a rude fellow cried aloud to him, "Lift up your voice, for I cannot hear you:" to whom Mr Vines replied, "Lift you up your ears, for I can speak no louder." The day before he died, he preached and administred the Lord's Supper; and about ten o'Clock the same evening, when going to bed, he was seized with a bleeding at the nose, and died quietly and comfortably between two and three o'clock the next morning, aged fifty-five years. His remains were interred, with great lamentation, in the church of Lawrence-Jewry, 7th Feb, 1655; when the celebrated Dr Thomas Jacombe preached his funeral sermon, giving him the following high commendation.—He was a burning and shining light in his day, possessing very excellent parts, even taller by the head than most of his brethren. He was an accomplished Scholar, a perfect Master of the Greek language, an excellent philologist, and an admirable orator. He was a ready and close disputant, and appeared to the admiration of many, in the Treaties of Uxbridge and the Isle of Wight. He wished to die praying or preaching. He had an undaunted spirit; and, like Luther, nothing would hinder him from a courageous and conscientious discharge of his duty.—Mr Newcomen said him, "a most acute disputant, a very happy public speaker, and an eminent divine." He was accounted "the very prince of preachers, a thorough Calvinist, and a bold honest man, without pride and flattery." Dr Ful er styled him "an excellent preacher, and the very champion of the Assembly;" and adds, "that he was constant to his principles, yet moderate and charitable toward those who differed from him." Many funeral poems and elegies were composed upon his death, both in Latin and in English. I have seen and read thirteen of these. Dr. Jacombe says, that he was very averse to print any thing of his own. But Dr. Fuller observes, that "many most able scholars have never publicly appeared in print: nor can their less learning be inferred from their more modesty."

Mr. Vines was author of the following learned Writings, which have been printed.

1. Caleb's Integrity in following the Lord fully; a sermon from Numb. xiv. 24, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Solemn Fast, Nov. 30th, 1642. Lond. 1642, and 1646.

2. The Impostures of Seducing Teachers Discovered; a sermon from Eph. iv. 14, 15, before the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen of the City of London, at their Anniversary meeting, April 23d, 1644. The 2d edit. Lond. 1656.

3. A sermon preached from Isa. lxiii. 8, before the Right Honourable, the Lord's and Commons, at Margaret's, Westminster, upon Thursday, July 18th, 1644, being the day of Public Thanksgiving for the great victory obtained near York: 4to. pp. 21. Lond. 1644, and 1646. At the conclusion of this sermon, he says, "Finally, let all men fortify their hearts against the evils which follow good success, that we be not made more loose in our Covenant than before; for we have reason to account this day to be the fruit of our entering and holding fast unto that. I say this day, which shews you the two nations formerly two, now made one in a covenant, in the field together, in a victory together, and in a pulpit to-

4. Fuller's Worthies of England, fol. Lond. 1662. Ch. Hist. Comp.
 5. Clark's Lives, Neal's Puritans, vol. iii. and iv. Jacombe's Fun. Ser. for Mr. Vines.

gether, paying unto God his praises, and so let them be for ever, one Judah yet ruling with God, and faithful with the saints."

4. The Posture of David's Spirit, when he was in a Doubtful Condition; a sermon from 2 Sam. xv. 25, 26, before the House of Commons, Oct. 22d, 1644. 4to. pp. 26. Lond. 1644.

5. The Happiness of Israel; a sermon from Deut. xxxiii. 29, before both Houses of Parliament, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London being present, in Christ's Church, on a day of Solemn Thanksgiving, 12th March, 1645. The 2d edit. Lond. 1656.

6. The Purifying of Unclean Hearts and Hands; a sermon from James iv. 8, before the Honourable House of Commons, at their Solemn Fast, Jan. 28th, 1646. 4to. pp. 31. Lond. 1646.

7. Funeral Sermon for the Earl of Essex, from 2 Sam. iii. 38. Oct. 22d, 1646. Lond. 1646.

8. The Authors, Nature, and Danger, of Heresy; a sermon from 2 Pet. ii. 1, before the Commons, 4to. pp. 70. Lond. 1647.

9. Obedience to Magistrates both Supreme and Subordinate, in three sermons from 1 Pet. ii. 13—16, and Tit. iii. 1, preached upon the Anniversary election-day of three Lord Mayors successively, Sept. 29th, 1653, 1654, and 1655, at the Church of Lawrence-Jewry, London, 1656.

10. The Corruption of Mind; a sermon preached from 2 Cor. xi. 3, at Paul's, 24th June, 1655. Lond. 1656.

I have seen these twelve sermons, by Mr Vines, collected into one volume, in Scotland.

Mr Vines was also the author of A Treatise of the Right Institution, Administration, and Receiving, of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; delivered in twenty sermons at Lawrence-Jewry, London. Small 4to. pp. 376. Lond. 1657, 1660.—Christ the Christian's only Gain, 1661.—God's Drawing and Man's Coming to Christ, 1662.—The Saint's Nearness to God, a small piece, Lond. 1662. Dedicated by Wm. Drury to the Countess Dowager of Exeter. It is said, that it was written upon request of an acquaintance.

Since writing the above, I have seen the third edition of Mr Vines's Treatise on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, London, 1677. And my Correspondent at London says, "a Bookseller told me that he had sold the single Funeral Sermon for the Earl of Essex, with a Head, by Vines, for 7s. and 6d. to be sent to Scotland."—A Funeral Sermon for Mr William Strong has been mentioned, in the list of Mr Vines's Writings, but I do not recollect to have seen it.

When Mr Vines was schoolmaster at Hinckley, he had for one of his pupils Mr John Cleiveland, a noted Royalist and popular Poet in the reign of Charles I, who, it is said, "owed the heaving of his natural fancy, by the choicest elegancies in Greek and Latin, to Mr Vines."

a Brook's Puritans, vol. iii. under Vines.

18

18. The first of the two main branches of the river is the
19. North Branch which flows from the north and joins the
20. main river at a point about 10 miles from the mouth.
21. The second main branch is the South Branch which flows
22. from the south and joins the main river at a point about
23. 20 miles from the mouth. The North Branch is the larger
24. of the two and carries more water than the South Branch.
25. The South Branch is more navigable than the North Branch
26. and is the main route for the transport of goods and
27. passengers. The North Branch is more difficult to navigate
28. because of the numerous rapids and shoals which are
29. found in its lower reaches. The South Branch is more
30. direct and has fewer obstacles to navigation.

THE HISTORY OF THE RIVER

31. The history of the river is a long and interesting one.
32. It has been the scene of many battles and has played an
33. important part in the development of the country. The 34. first recorded voyage up the river was made by the
35. French explorer, Samuel de Champlain, in 1609. He
36. was the first to discover the mouth of the river and to 37. establish a settlement at its mouth. The river was 38. then called the River of the Mountains because of the 39. high mountains which rise from its banks. The name was
40. changed to the River of the North when the English
41. took possession of the country in 1613. The river was
42. then called the River of the North because it flows
43. from the north. The name was changed again to the
44. River of the South when the English discovered that 45. the river actually flows from the south. The name was
46. changed a third time to the River of the Mountains when
47. the English discovered that the river actually flows
48. from the mountains. The name was changed a fourth
49. time to the River of the North when the English
50. discovered that the river actually flows from the north.

Countess Dowager of Exeter. It is said, that it was written upon request of an acquaintance.

Since writing the above, I have seen the third edition of Mr Vines's Treatise on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, London, 1677. And my Correspondent at London says, "a Bookseller told me that he had sold the single Funeral Sermon for the Earl of Essex, with a Head, by Vines, for 7s. and 6d. to be sent to Scotland."—A Funeral Sermon for Mr William Strong has been mentioned, in the list of Mr Vines's Writings, but I do not recollect to have seen it.

When Mr Vines was schoolmaster at Hinckley, he had for one of his pupils Mr John Cleivland, a noted Royalist and popular Poet in the reign of Charles I, who, it is said, "owed the heaving of his natural fancy, by the choicest elegancies in Greek and Latin, to Mr Vines."^a

GEORGE WALKER, B. D.

PASTOR OF JOHN EVANGELIST'S, LONDON, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

GEORGE WALKER was born at Hawkshead, a market-town, in Fourness, in Lancashire, a maritime county, in the North-west part of England, in the year 1581. He was descended from religious parents, who were highly beneficial unto him, in his early years, and peculiarly attentive to his education. It pleased the Lord to visit him, when he was a child, with the small-pox, and while those persons who attended him stood expecting his dissolution, he started out of a trance, with the following remarkable ejaculation, or fervent prayer, Lord, take me not away till I have shewed forth thy praises. This induced his parents, upon his recovery, to devote him in a solemn manner, to the important work of the holy ministry.—

^a Brook's Puritans, vol. iii. under Vines.

With God all things are possible. That remarkable visitation with the small-pox seems to have proved a happy dispensation, under the divine blessing, to the subject of this Memoir, in great mercy laying the foundation of his spiritual health in his seemingly dangerous sickness. It is a happy sickness which terminates in the recovery of the soul to God. And the mercy which this unexpected recovery brought with it, was a rich equivalent for all the former sorrows of his relations and attendants. Both his religious parents and himself beautifully imitated the pious gratitude of that good woman, who, when recovered by Jesus, immediately arose, and ministered to him, and to his followers. Mat. viii. 14, 15. Those lives which are mercifully spared by the goodness of God, and that strength which is renewed by his almighty power, should be faithfully, affectionately, and solemnly, devoted to his most honourable service. Sparing our lives, healing our diseases, and renewing our strength, are certainly intended to fit us for action, that we may gratefully minister unto Christ, and unto those who are his, for his sake. Our religious youth, having been highly favoured with the pious instructions of his parents in very early life, found these instructions of peculiar advantage to him, while he was a stranger and pilgrim on the earth. In due time, he received a liberal education in St. John's-College, in the University of Cambridge, where he applied with great assiduity to his studies, and his proficiency was very conspicuous in different parts of literature. He was esteemed an excellent logician, a good Oriental scholar, and an eminent divine. He proceeded B. D. in that College. Having finished his studies at the University, he went to London; and, in the year 1614, he became Rector of John the Evangelist, in Watling-street. In that place, he continued a faithful and labourious minister of the glorious gospel of the grace of God nearly forty years. He refused all other and higher preferments, though frequently offered him. He did not preach the gospel of Christ with a view to obtain preferment, but with the noble view of being an instrument in gaining precious and immortal souls to his glorious Redeemer. About the same time, he became chaplain to Dr Felton, bishop of Ely, who made choice of him on the very morning of his consecration. And the celebrated Dr Featly made choice of him as his second, in one of his disputations with Father Fisher, the famous Jesuit. Mr Walker was eminently distinguished by his very bold and successful opposition to popery, and he readily engaged several times in public disputations against its errors and superstitions, with some of the most subtle Jesuits. He boldly attacked that dreadful system of error and corruption, which is entirely contrary to the pure religion of the Bible, destructive to the souls of the human race, and inconsistent with both civil and religious liberty. He judiciously exposed the falsehoods of the Romish Church, and became very conspicuous as a zealous friend of the Reformation. On the last of May, in the year 1623, he had a public dispute with a popish priest of the name of Smith, before a very large assembly; and, by the consent of both parties, the account of it was afterward published, and entitled, "The Sum of a Disputation between Mr Walker, Pastor of St. John the Evangelist, and a Popish Priest, calling himself Mr Smith, but indeed Norris, printed 1623, 4to." Wood says that Norris was a Doctor of Divinity, and a publisher of several little popish pamphlets about the same time. In the following year, Mr Walker engaged with Fisher, the Jesuit, and thereupon published Fisher's Folly Unfolded; or, The Vaunting Jesuit's Challenge Answered, London, 1624. He had many encounters with Fisher, and several other persons, who were accounted the most able disputants of the Romish persuasion.

Mr Walker was a divine of genuine piety, and of very strict Sabbatarian principles. He frequently urged from the pulpit, with great energy, the necessity and propriety of an exact observance of the Lord's day. The very little respect which is paid to the Lord's day, greatly contributes to increase that general inattention and indifference which evidently threaten to undermine the morals and religion of this country. The observance of one day in seven, as a day of rest from business, and of engaging by well doing, to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men!

In the year 1643, Mr Walker was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, where, by his munificent and generous behaviour, he gained a distinguished and shining reputation. He is marked in Mr Neal's list, as giving constant attendance. In the year following, he was appointed one of the Committee for the examination and ordination, by imposition of hands, of those persons who were judged qualified to be admitted into the sacred Ministry. The same year he was one of the witnesses against Archbishop Laud at his trial, when he deposed that the archbishop had endeavoured to introduce Arminianism and the popish superstitions into the church of England. He preached sometimes before the Parliament. Though Wood reproaches him with having preached, after the Long Parliament began, against the King and his followers, and having published several things, which before he was not permitted to do, he united with his brethren, the London ministers, in their protestation against the King's death, declaring that his majesty ought to have been released. He was a member of the first provincial assembly in London, and sometimes chosen moderator. He died in the year 1651, aged about seventy years, and his remains were interred in his own church in Watling-Street. Dr. Fuller says, "He was well skilled in the Oriental languages, and an excellent logician and divine. He was a man of a holy life, an humble spirit, and a liberal hand, who deserved well of Zion College library; and who, by his example and persuasion, advanced about a thousand pounds for the maintenance of preaching ministers in his native country. He ever wrote all his sermons, though making no other use of his notes in the pulpit, than keeping them in his pocket, being wont to say, that he thought he should be out if he had them not about him." Wood allows that he was a learned man, but a severe Puritan.*

* Wood's Athenæ, vol. i. 2 edit. Fuller's Worthies of England, 1662, folio. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii. Walker's Ser.

Mr Walker has published, beside the two pieces which are mentioned in the account of his life, Socinianism in the Fundamental Point of Justification Discovered and Confuted, A small book, pp. 355. London, 1641. An excellent work.—The Doctrine of the Holy Weekly Sabbath, 1641.—The Manifold Wisdom of God; in the divers dispensation of Grace by Jesus Christ. A small book, pp. 173. London, 1640, 1641.—God made Visible in all his Works, 1641.—A Sermon preached from Psalm lviii. 9. before the House of Commons, Fast, 1644. 4to. pp. 53. London, 1645.

JOHN WALLIS, D. D.

AN EMINENT MATHEMATICIAN AND DIVINE, SOMETIME SAVILIAN PROFESSOR OF GEOMETRY, IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, KEEPER OF THE ARCHIVES, MEMBER OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF LONDON, SOMETIME ONE OF THE SECRETARIES TO THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER, AND CHAPLAIN IN ORDINARY TO KING CHARLES THE SECOND.

JOHN WALLIS was born at Ashford, a large market town in the county of Kent, in England, on the 23d of Nov. 1616. His father was John Wallis, M. A. an eminently pious, learned, and orthodox divine, and minister of Ashford in Kent. His mother was Joanna, daughter of Henry and Sarah Chapman of Godmersham in Kent. His father died Nov. 30, 1622, when he was very young, and he was then and afterward under the tender care of his mother. She was peculiarly careful in the pious and prudent education of all her children; bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

In the year 1625, there was a great plague in London and many other places, and particularly in Ashford, which caused many of the inhabitants to remove for their safety. On this occasion, the subject of this Memoir was sent to Leygreen, near Tenterden, a market-town in Kent; to receive his grammatical education. In that place, he was the scholar of Mr James Moffat, a Scotchman, for several years. By him he was well grounded in the technical part of grammar, so as to understand the rules, and the reason of these rules, with their application in such authors as are usually read in grammar-schools.

Our young scholar was always inclined from his very childhood, not only to learn rules by rote, but also to understand the true meaning and the reasons of these rules. The school at Leygreen at length broke up, when, for learning, he might have gone to the University; but he was thought too young; and therefore he was sent, toward the end of Dec. in the year 1630, to Felsted-school in Essex, which was at that time a school of good reputation, where he continued two years. By this time, he was well grounded in the Latin and Greek languages, having read several authors in both of these. He was always principally attentive to the grammar. And he had been accustomed in both schools to speak Latin, which rendered that language very familiar to him; and which he afterwards found highly advantageous. He had also learned so much Hebrew as that, by the help of his grammar and dictionary, he could proceed farther without a teacher. Afterward, in the University, he became very accurate in that language, especially in the grammatical part, the changes of points and seat of accents, and read over the Hebrew Bible, or the greater part of it, more than once. The knowledge of Hebrew is unquestionably essential to the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. The want of that knowledge in Ministers of the Gospel is condemnable. While it is a disgrace to the order, it is a serious loss to the Christian community.—Our celebrated scholar pursued his studies, at all times, with great vigour, industry, and success. He was now also so far instructed in the rudiments of logic, music, and the French language. And during a vacation from school, when he was about a fortnight at home with his mother at Ashford, he learned the practical part of common Arithmetic from a younger brother of his, which was his first entry into mathematics, a science in which he afterward became very eminent.

In Dec. 1632, he was sent to the University of Cambridge, and there admitted in Emanuel-college, under the tuition of Mr Anthony Burgess, whom he himself says, was a pious, learned and able scholar, a good disputant, a good tutor, an eminent preacher, a sound and orthodox divine, and afterward minister of Sutton-Cosfield, in Warwickshire. He there proceeded Bachelor of Arts at the beginning of the year 1637, and Master of Arts in 1640. His literature and talents appeared in a very respectable light. He was always reputed one of the best scholars of his rank.—In the year 1640, he entered into the holy ministry. He was ordained by Bishop Curle, who was then Bishop of Winchester. He was about a year chaplain to Sir Richard Darby, at Buttercrum, in York-shire. He afterward removed to the family of Lady Vere, widow of Lord Horatio Vere, with whom he continued about two years. While with her, he was sometimes in London, and sometimes at her house at Castle Hedingham in Essex. He was afterward, about a year, Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge. But, when he married Susanna Clyde, of Northiam, in Essex, March 4th, 1644–5, he quitted that fellowship.

About the year 1644, he was chosen one of the Scribes or Secretaries to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He was not in the Assembly from the commencement of the session, nor is his name in the ordinance for calling that Assembly; but he came into it at the time above-mentioned, and was one of the Scribes or Secretaries. During his attendance on that Assembly, he was a minister in London, first in Fenchurch-street, and afterward in Ironmonger-lane; where he continued until his removal to Oxford. There he prosecuted his studies, till he at length attained to such proficiency, as to be reputed one of the first mathematicians of the age in which he lived. He had a most accurate judgment in all mathematical studies; and was successful to admiration in decyphering the most intricate writings; an argument of a most subtil searching wit and judgment. In a very great variety of cyphered letters, he discovered the mind of the writer, in spite of every method which art could devise to prevent it. Our author's own account of his first outset in this business, is as follows. "About the beginning of our civil wars, in the year 1642 or 1643, a chaplain of Sir William Waller shewed me one evening just as we were sitting down to supper at Lady Vere's, as a curiosity, an intercepted letter written in cypher, and it was, indeed, the first thing I had ever seen of the kind; and asked me, between jest and earnest, if I could make any thing of it, and was surprised when I told him, perhaps I might. It was about ten o'clock when we rose from supper, and I withdrew from my chamber to consider of it. By the number of different characters in it, there being not more than 22 or 23, I judged it could be no more than a new alphabet; and before I went to bed I found it out; which was my first attempt upon decyphering." He must have been endued with a ready turn for conjecture, because in several letters a figure or a character was used for whole words, and beside a great many nulls interspersed, which must have added very much to the difficulty of decyphering. He was often employed in that arduous work, and complained of being badly rewarded for his services.

When Academical studies were much interrupted by the civil wars in both the English Universities, the eminently learned men resorted to London, and there formed assemblies. Mr Wallis belonged to one of these, who met once a week, to discourse on philosophical subjects: and this society was the beginning of what was afterward incorporated under the name of the Royal Society. In 1649, he became Savilian Professor of Geometry at Oxford, where he passed agreeably the remainder of his days, in the cultivation of those sciences, which he much improved to the honour both of himself and of his country. He opened his lectures on the last day of October, with an inaugural speech in Latin, which was printed. On May 31st, in 1654, he took the degree of Doctor of Divinity. In 1658, he was chosen Keeper of the Archives of the University of Oxford. Upon the Restoration of King Charles II, he met with great respect; the King himself entertained a favourable opinion of him ; he was therefore not only made one of the King's chaplains, but also confirmed in both his places of Savilian Professor and Keeper of the Archives. In 1661, he was appointed one of the Divines, who were empowered to review the Book of Common Prayer. He afterward complied with the terms of the act of Uniformity, and is said to have continued a steady conformist to the church of England till his death. He was one of the first members of the Royal Society, and kept a constant correspondence with it by letters and papers, many of which are published in the Transactions of that Society. Lord Brounker, Sir Isaac Newtown, Dr Burrow, Dr Wallis, Mr Gregory, Dr Halley, with other learned men of that day, were the respectable members, who, in the year 1668, formed the Royal Society in London.^a William Brounker, Lord Viscount of Castle Lyons in Ireland, and first President of the Royal Society after its incorporation, was engaged in a literary correspondence on mathematical subjects with Dr Wallis.^b And Dr Wallis addressed to the celebrated Mr Boyle his hypothesis on the flux and reflux of the sea, which was printed in the Philosophical Transactions. The wonderful memory of our learned author, who could extract the cube root by mere mental process to an hundred places of figures, is said to be well known in England. These operations required a seclusion of himself from the external impressions of light, sound, and muscular action. And we are informed that similar mental operations in the case of Mr Brindly, in extraordinary mechanical pursuits, required the same seclusion in the solitude of his bed.—Dr Wallis has attempted to prove that Gerbertus, Archbishop of Rheims, afterward Pope Silvester the II, had, before the year 1000, learned the art of Arithmetic as now practised with only nine characters, from the Saracens in Spain. Edward Bernard, a learned English astronomer and linguist, particularly eminent in Oriental literature, studied mathematics under Dr Wallis. We mention this, because the reputation of an illustrious man is augmented by that of his disciples.—Dr Wallis's depth of science and acuteness of intellect led him early to pronounce on speculation, the practicability of teaching the deaf to speak, and to verify his theory in the tuition of Mr Whally, a young gentleman of Northampton, deaf and dumb from his birth. Having fully succeeded in the first essay of his skill, he made a second with the son of Admiral Popham; and was afterward employed in instructing deaf and dumb pupils without teaching them to speak. He was also an eminent divine; and much employed in defence of the Trinity and of the Sabbath. He had a very clear apprehension in divine things, and could accurately distinguish truth from error.—He died, Oct. 28th, in 1703, in his 88th year, being 87 years, 3 months, and 5 days old; leaving behind him one son and two daughters, to lament the loss of a good father. His remains were interred in the choir of Mary's Church, in Oxford, where a handsome monument is erected to his memory.

^a Monthly Review, vol. iv. p. 582.

^b Gen. Biogr. vol. ii. under Brounker.

The Monthly Reviewers, in reviewing Dr Wallis's Sermons, which were first published in the year 1791, give him the following character: they say that he was "a man of great ability, learning, worth, and celebrity, in his day; although, as it must happen, in the progress of years, to numbers who, like Dr Wallis, merit a favourable report, his memory has been too much disregarded.—Though Dr Wallis did not apply to this science, (mathematics) as a business, until he was upward of forty years of age, it presently appeared that he had a genius particularly fitted for the pursuit. He soon became eminent: of which he gave proof by the works that he published. He was allowed to be the first mathematician of the time in which he lived, next to Sir Isaac Newton. One accidental testimony of this, is his 'Commercium Epistolicum,' occasioned by a challenge given by Mr Fermate (a Frenchman,) to the English, Dutch, and French mathematicians (except those of Paris,) to answer a numerical question. The Doctor accomplished it with great applause, and received, among other commendations, in a letter addressed to Sir Kenelm Digby, the farther acknowledgement, 'Now must Holland yield to England, and Paris to Oxford.'

In connection, it is proper to mention his acuteness as a decypherer; in which art he was employed for several years, with great success, although for sometime with but inconsiderable emolument to himself. On the whole, Dr W. must be regarded as a man who stands high in the learned world. As a theologian, he ranked with those who at that time claimed the denomination of orthodox, and he appears to have been an adept in that kind of divinity: but, which is far more important, he also appears earnestly solicitous to advance the true interest of his hearers. Learned and skilful he certainly was; and we apprehend he acted conformably to the noble dictates of virtue, integrity and goodness." This may be considered as a respectable testimony to Dr Wallis's professional character. We are told more particularly, that he had a vigorous constitution, a strong mind, calm, serene, and not easily ruffled or discomposed. He was reckoned the glory and ornament both of his country, and of the University. He had a clear apprehension, a solid and penetrating judgment. And he was a most strenuous and warm defender of the all-important doctrine of the Ever-blessed Trinity, and of the Sabbath-day. Memoirs of Dr Wallis, with a fine Portrait, were published in the Universal Magazine for March, 1802, vol. 110, London.

Dr Wallis's writings are numerous. In 1642, or 43, he published a book, which was entitled, Truth Tried, or Animadversions on Lord Brook's Treatise, called, The Nature of Truth. This, perhaps, might be thought a very learned work when it was written, though it may now be reckoned too scholastic, being written in the manner of the Peripatetic philosophy.—In 1650, he published some Animadversions on a book written by Mr Baxter, entitled, Aphorisms of Justification and of the Covenant.—About the year 1653, he published his Tractus de Lo- in religious exercises, is certainly one of the most ancient and venerable institutions which we have. Experience seems to have established a general idea of both its wisdom and utility. If mankind are capable of religion, as they certainly are, it appears to be of very great importance and utility to them, that there should be, at regular intervals, a cessation from labour, and opportunities of receiving religious instruction, and of having serious impressions made upon the mind. Mr Walker's very great regard for the Sabbath makes a conspicuous appearance in his writings. His sermons, which were afterward printed against the profanation of the Sabbath, and other evil practices and opinions, procured him much trouble, and two years' imprisonment. In the year 1635, having openly avowed his sentiments in one of his sermons, and warmly recommended the holy observance of the Sabbath, as opposed to a book which was published by Bishop White of Ely, and set forth by public authority, he was convened before Archbishop Laud, when he received canonical admonition. In the year 1638, he was prosecuted and severely censured in the Star-chamber. Having preached a sermon in his own church, with a view to prove that it is a sin to obey the greatest monarch on earth, in those things which stand opposed to the commands of God, he was committed twelve weeks to the custody of a pursuivant, to whom he paid fees to the amount of twenty pounds. Upon his prosecution, he was shut up ten weeks close prisoner in the Gatehouse, and at last compelled to enter into a bond of a thousand pounds, to confine himself prisoner in his brother's house at Cheswick, when his living was sequestered. He continued a prisoner about two years, but was afterward released by an order of the Parliament.

His case was laid before the House of Commons, in the year 1641, when it was resolved, "That his commitment from the Council-table for preaching a sermon, October 14, 1638, and his detainment twelve weeks for the same, is against the law and the liberty of the subject. That the prosecution of the said Walker in the Star chamber, for preaching the said sermon, and his close imprisonment thereupon for ten weeks in the Gatehouse, and the payment of twenty pounds fees, is against law and the liberty of the subject.—

That the five passages marked in the sermon, by Mr. Attorney and Sir John Banks, contain no crime, nor deserve any censure, nor he any punishment for them.—That the enforcing the said Walker to enter into the bond of one thousand pounds, for confinement in his brother's house at Cheswick, and his imprisonment there, is against law.—That the sequestration of the parsonage of the said Walker, by Sir John Lamb, was done without any warrant and against the law of the land.—That Walker ought to be restored to his parsonage, and the whole profits thereof, from the time of the said sequestration, and to have reparation for all such damages as he hath sustained by these several imprisonments, and his case transmitted to the lords.”

After Mr Walker's release from confinement, he returned to his benefice and ministerial charge in Watling-Street, London, where he continued the rest of his days without further molestation. Laud, in the height of his pride, affirmed, and bade him assure himself of it, That he should never come into a pulpit to preach any more. But the proud persecuting prelate of Canterbury was once mistaken. Almighty God often controuls the wrath of wicked and unreasonable men, and when it rages like the sea in a storm, he says to it, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. Mr Walker's persecutors could prove nothing against him, but a stedfast and consistent attachment to divine truth. May it ever be our constant care to preserve consciences void of offence both toward God and toward man; as he did. And may the unsearchable riches of divine grace always enable us quela Grammatica Physicus, since many times reprinted. Or, Grammatica Linguae Anglicanae, cum tractatu de Loquela seu sonorum formatione, in 8vo. In the piece de Loquela, he informs us, that he has philosophically considered the formation of all sounds used in articulate speech, as well of our own, as of any other language that he knew; by what organs, and in what position, each sound was formed; with the nice distinctions of each, which in some letters of the same organ are very subtle: so that by such organs, in such position, the breath issuing from the lungs will form such sounds, whether the person do or do not hear himself speak. Pursuing these reflections, he was led to think it possible, that a deaf person might be taught to speak, by being directed so to apply the organs of speech, as the sound of each letter required, which children learn by imitation and frequent attempts, rather than by art. Thus he undertook to teach some dumb persons to speak, with success.—

In the year 1653, was published, in Latin, his Grammar of the English tongue, for the use of Foreigners, in a manner entirely different from any thing of the kind, it is said, which has been before or since published. In this ingenious work, a remark is made which may be new to some of our readers; speaking of words which begin with or, as if, says he, these took their meaning from the cross—among other illustrations, he adds, Richard III, formerly King of England, was called, Crouched-back, not because his back was crooked, but because he wore on his back the form of the cross.—Of this valuable work, a new and handsome edition was printed, in 1765, at the expence of Mr Thomas Hollis, who was remarkable for appropriating a considerable part of his large estate to acts of peculiar benevolence, particularly to the patriotic purpose of reprinting scarce and valuable publications. Of his impressions of those, he usually gave away great numbers, especially to seminaries of learning, in most parts of the globe, as well as to private persons; and such presents were often clothed in the most elegant and expensive binding. He caused a fine portrait of Dr Wallis to be prefixed to his edition of a Latin Grammar, from a drawing by Cypriani, which print is well copied and placed as a frontispiece to the Doctor's sermons.

In 1655, Mr Thomas Hobbes having printed his Treatise de Corpore Philosophico, Dr Wallis, the same year, published a confutation of it in Latin, under the title of Euenchus Geometriæ Hobbianaæ, which was printed in Octavo at Oxford. This so provoked Mr Hobbes, that in 1656, he published it in English, with the addition of what he called, "Six Lessons to the Professors of Mathematics in Oxford," 4to. Upon this, Dr Wallis wrote an answer, in English, entitled, 'Due Correction for Mr Hobbes; or School-Discipline for not saying his Lessons right, 1656.' To this Mr Hobbes replied in a pamphlet, entitled, Stigmai, or Marks of the Absurd Geometry, &c. of J. Wallis, 1657, 4to. This was immediately rejoined to by Dr W. in 'Hobbiani Puncti Dispunctio,' 1657; and here the controversy seems to have ended at this time. But in 1661, Mr Hobbes printed 'Examinatio,' &c. This caused Dr W. to publish the next year, 'Hobbius Heautontimoruminos,' in 8vo. addressed to Mr Boyle.—In 1657, he collected and published his mathematical works, in two parts, titled, 'Mathesis Universalis,' 4to.—In 1658, he published in 4to. at Oxford, 'Commercium Epistolicum de Questionibus Mathematicis.' He still continued to publish many useful mathematical works. In 1676, he gave an edition of Archimedes's Avenarius; and Dimensio Circuli. In 1682, he published from the Mss. Claudii Ptolemæi Opus Harmonicum, in Gr. with a Latin version and notes; to which he afterward added an Appendix.—He published several theological pieces. I have seen a quarto vol. of his theological discourses; containing 8 Letters and 3 sermons concerning the Blessed Trinity; The Life of Faith, in two sermons, to the University of Oxford; God's Sovereignty and Justice, in two sermons, before the Judges of Assize, from Gen xviii. 25.—The True Treasure, two sermons from Mat. vi. 19, 20, 21. God's Deliverances of his People; from 2 Cor. i. 10. Of Repentance; and Discourses concerning Melchizedek, Job, and the Titles of the Psalms, &c. London, 1692. He also published two sermons, entitled, The Necessity of Regeneration; and The Resurrection Asserted.—He also wrote a Defence of the Sabbath, respecting which we find a Dissenter expressing himself to him as follows: "I have read over the first part of your Discourse upon the Christian Sabbath; and liked it so well that I was eager to get the second. In reading thereof I could not but admire the large measure of the understanding which the Lord out of his goodness has been pleased to bestow upon you above many other pious and learned men."—He also wrote 'A Defence of Infant-Baptism,' Oxford, 1697.—I have 'A Brief and Easy Explanation of the Shorter Catechism, which was presented by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster to both Houses of Parliament, by Dr Wallis. A small piece, the 8th edition, London, 1659. His pamphlets, letters, and books, on several subjects, are very numerous.

In 1697, the Curators of the press at Oxford thought it for the honour of the University, to collect all his works which had been printed separately, as well in English as in Latin, and to publish these together in Latin. They were accordingly published at Oxford, in 1699, in 3 vols. folio; and dedicated to King William.—A posthumous vol. of 13 sermons, with an ample account of Dr Wallis' life, was published at London, in 1791, in 8vo. from the author's original Mss. by his great grandson, Mr William Wallis, who had in possession some valuable Mss. and till lately a rich gold medal, which had been presented to Dr Wallis by the Elector of Brandenburg, with an honourable inscription and a chain of gold of so great value as to produce from a refiner the sum of sixty-two pounds five shillings. In these sermons, the reader may see both the author's learning and piety; with the Calvinistic doctrines of the Reformation, and of the Holy Scriptures. They may indeed be accounted too Puritanical by some persons; but they will not be the less acceptable on that account to others. The style is plain, and the matter excellent.^a

^a a Memoirs prefixed to these Sermons, and Universal Magazine, for March 1802, vol. cx.

JOHN WARD.

SEVERAL persons of this name were eminently pious, learned, and conscientious nonconformists, in England, about the time that our author lived. John Ward, who, in this place, comes under our consideration, was sometime Minister of the gospel, in Ipswich, the capital of Suffolk, in England. He was one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, superadded, and said to have constantly attended.

I have seen the following sermons, by this Mr Ward. —God Judging Among the Gods: a sermon from Psalm lxxxii. 1, before the Commons, Fast, 26th of March, 1645. London, 1645.—The Good-Will of Him who Dwelt in the Bush; or, The Extraordinary Happiness of Living Under an Extraordinary Providence: a sermon preached from Deut. xxxiii. 16, before the Lords, in the Abbey-Church, Westminster, Thanksgiving, 22d of July, 1645. London, 1645.

JOHN WHINCOP, D. D.

JOHAN WHINCOP was a member of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. His name is found in the ordinance of Parliament for calling an Assembly of learned and godly Divines; and he is said to be of St. Martin's in the Fields. In Neal's list, he is described, D. D. and as giving constant attendance during the session.

A John Whincop, D. D. said to be sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and about the year 1644, or 1645, Pastor of the Church of Clothall, in Hartfordshire, has two sermons extant, which I have now before me. 1. God's Call to Weeping and Mourning, from Isa. xxii. 12. preached to the House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, 4to. pp. 51. London, 1645.—2. Israel's Tears for Distressed Zion, from Psalm cxxxvii. 1, to the House of Lord's, at their solemn Fast, 4to. pp. 47. London, 1645. Probably, though I cannot say certainly, this was the Dr. Whincop, who was a Member of the Westminster Assembly. But be that as it may, I cannot give any farther account of any person of that name.

JEREMIAH WHITAKER, A. M.

PASTOR OF STRETTON, AND OF MARY MAGDALEN BERMONDSEY, IN SOUTHWARK, AND A MEMBER OF THE VENERABLE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

JEREMIAH WHITAKER was born at Wakefield, in Yorkshire, in the year 1599. He was instructed in grammar-learning, at the place of his birth. His early piety was very remarkable. He appears to have been a young convert. The Lord, who hath loved his own chosen ones, with an everlasting love, seems to have drawn him with loving-kindness, in the days of his youth, Jer. xxxi. 3. As an evidence of this, while he was a boy at the school, he discovered strong and warm affections toward such as were religiously disposed. And Christ says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," John xiii. 35. This is the livery of his family, the distinguishing character of his disciples." See 1 John iii. 14. And, he often travelled eight or ten miles, in company with religious persons, to hear an awakening, soul-refreshing, and heart-searching sermon. He also joined with such persons in prayer, and other holy exercises and duties. And being very capable to take notes of sermons, he was peculiarly helpful to those private Christians, with whom he associated, in repeating what they had publicly heard. "Then they who feared the Lord spake often a Henry, on the place.

one to another," Mal. iii. 16. And, here we may observe, that divine grace makes a very great change upon mankind-sinners, when they commence its subjects. Before, they are under the condemning and enslaving dominion of sin; being "by nature the children of wrath, even as others," Eph. ii. 3. The grace of God doth not find mankind religious and godly; but it makes them so. As Seneca said concerning Plato, that philosophy did not find Plato noble, but made him so.^a "By the grace of God I am what I am," 1 Cor. xv. 10. And here we may certainly say, in the language of Juvenal, great respect is due to youth of this description; and the church of Christ ought to be deeply concerned for their welfare.^b Such are the hope of the church. Farther, with relation to our young Whitaker, while he was at the grammar-school, there was found some good thing in him toward the Lord God of Israel, 1 Kings xiv. 13. For on several occasions, he discovered a very strong propensivity unto the office of the holy ministry. His father endeavoured earnestly, with repeated solicitations, to dissuade him from that choice; but could not prevail. And, the pious subject of this Memoir was so far from repenting of his choice, that both now, and afterward, he continued to magnify that office more and more. He often said, "I had much rather be a preacher of the gospel, than an emperor." And when he was, by a special designation of Divine providence, vested with that office, he esteemed it the most signal honour of his life to be employed therein. And, as the same objects of pursuit do not please all men; but some make choice of one employment, and others of another, according to their various inclinations:^c So among different choices, this was his fixed and permanent choice. Accordingly, when a motion was once made to him, to be the head of a College in the University, he readily replied, "My heart doth more desire to be a constant preacher, than to be the Master of any College in the world."

^a Sen. Epist. 44.

^b Maxima debetur puero reverentia, Juv. 14, 47.

^c Horace, Ode 1.

When he was sixteen years of age, being well instructed in grammar-learning, he was sent to the University of Cambridge, and admitted into Sidney-College, where he had a liberal education, and proceeded in arts. He was soon held in high reputation for his excellent parts, and scholarship. And his name is enrolled among the learned writers of that College, by Dr Fuller, in his History of the University of Cambridge.^a He commenced bachelor of arts, when he was twenty years of age. Afterward, he taught the free school in Okeham, the chief town in Rutlandshire, where he continued about seven years. Here he married the daughter of the Rev. and eminent William Peachy, minister at Okeham. By her he had four sons, and three daughters. He designed all his sons for the holy ministry, such was his regard for the service of Christ, his Lord and Master. And he lived to see two of them ordained to that office. One died while he was a student in Cambridge. He appointed the other one to be educated for that office. Being vested with that office which he so ardently desired, he entered upon a pastoral charge at Stretton, in the county of Rutland, where he continued a careful, faithful, and diligent minister of the gospel, about the space of thirteen years. He was now in his own element, like a fish in the water, or a bird in the air. Beside his pastoral employment, preaching twice every Lord's day at Stretton, he also constantly carried on a weekly lecture at Okeham; and supported some other institutions of that kind in the neighbourhood. —He set apart days for fasting and humiliation in secret and private often; and was very ready to join in such exercises, when called thereto, either in Rutlandshire, or in the adjacent countries. He was equally attentive to family duties, and the devotion of the closet, wherein he ardently sought communion with God. His ordinary course in his family was, to worship God, and to expound some part of the Holy Scriptures, twice every day. Beside, he read parts of God's word in secret; and he usually read all the epistles in the Greek Testament twice every fortnight.* And when by extremity of pain and weakness, he could not read himself, he employed others to read to him. Hence he was mighty in the Scriptures, like Apollos, Acts xviii. 24. This course he earnestly commended to his eldest son, as an excellent mean, to make him both a ready and a profitable preacher.

^a Hist. page 154.

While he lived in Rutlandshire, the book allowing sports on the Lord's day made its appearance. This he refused to read, although it was ardently pressed upon him, both by commands and threatenings. And afterward, when called to give in his answer relative to a contribution among ministers, to maintain a war against the Scots, he openly told the bishop, or his chancellor, that his conscience would not permit him to do it. This answer, given with zeal and courage, exposed him to the hazard of losing both his ministry and benefit, as the times then were. Upon this, one of his neighbours, pitying him and his family, through false compassion, paid the money required, and subscribed Mr Whitaker's name without his knowledge. This was long concealed from him; but when the deed was made known to him, he expressed his displeasure against it, with many complaints, and much grief of heart.

In the year 1643, he was nominated one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, on account of his eminent piety and learning. And he was accounted very useful and advantageous in that Assembly, by his brethren there, and acquaintances. Upon his coming to London, he was chosen and called to the pastoral charge of Mary Magdalen Bermondsey, a rectory in Southwark. In relation to the acceptance of this charge he consulted many godly and judicious ministers. And with their concurrence and approbation, he accepted it. He was now in labours more abundant, 2 Cor. xi. 23. Distinguished from many of his brethren, by more eminent services. He preached three or four sermons generally every week; two in Southwark, his own charge, one at a Clarke's Lives of ten eminent Divines, London, 1662; and Ashe's Sermon at his funeral, page 57.

Westminster, and one at Christ-Church, London. And when he gave up his lecture at Christ-Church, he undertook another at Stepney. Beside, he was engaged in two lectures quarterly at Michael's Cornhill. And he preached monthly at the morning exercise, or else he assisted on the days of fasting in the conclusion of these exercises. Beside, he preached many occasional sermons, at the dispensation of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and at funerals. Add to all this, his attending the work of the Assembly of Divines. In a word, he never withdrew from any opportunity of preaching, or serving the church of Christ otherwise, if he was in health. And though he preached so often, his sermons were not mean or empty; but solid and judicious. This narrative may call to our mind, Paul's commendation of Epaphroditus, his brother, and companion in labour, who, for the work of Christ was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, to supply the church's lack of service, Phil. ii. 25—30. And it calls upon all students of divinity, and ministers of the gospel, in a particular way, to be active and diligent in the work which Christ hath appointed them. "For Christ keeps no servants to be idle. Christ's servants receive their all from him; and our receiving from Christ is in order to our working for him.—The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."^a And the slothful servant is the wicked servant; whose doom is tremendous indeed, Mat. xxv. 26—30. "Whatever our particular snares in life may be, let us think of the doom of the slothful servant, to awaken our souls, and to deter us from every degree of unfaithfulness."^b And let us imitate the diligence and faithfulness of this eminently laborious servant of Jesus Christ. "Setting before us excellent examples useth to spur us on to an imitation of them."^c

Mr Whitaker was of the Presbyterian persuasion, and had a chief hand in composing the Defence of the Gospel Ministry, published in the year 1654, by the Provincial Synod of London. Dr Fuller ranks him among those, in the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, who in their judgment favoured the Presbyterian discipline, who seemed to be pillars, as on whose abilities the weight of the work mostly lay.^a And Neal says, "No man was more beloved by the Presbyterian ministers of London than Mr Whitaker."^b He refused the engagement; though he was thereby in danger of losing his lecture at Westminster. In these times of awful apostacy, confusion, and corruption, he discovered an undaunted courage, and much Christian magnanimity, both in public and private, in behalf of truth and holiness, against every prevailing evil, whether error or immorality. In his sermons preached at Westminster, from Eph. ii. 2, 3. concerning men's walking according to the course of this world and fulfilling the lusts of the flesh; and during the military despotism of Oliver Cromwell, he shewed much zeal for the glory of God, and warm attachment to his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. When the stormy tempest seemed to blow harder and harder; and the faithful were in danger of suffering much for righteousness' sake, as he was riding with one of his intimate friends, past Tyburn, where many malefactors had been put to death, he stopped his horse, and expressed the following words with great affection: "Oh what a shame is it, that so many thousands should die for the satisfaction of their lusts, and so few be found willing to lay down their lives for Christ! Why should not we, in a good cause, and upon a good call, be ready to be hanged for Jesus Christ? It would be an everlasting honour: and it is a thousand times better to die for Christ, to be hanged, or to be burnt for Christ, than to die in our beds."

^a Henry on Mat. xxv. 14.

^b Doddridge on Mat. xxv. 30. Improvement.

^c Wishart's Theologia, vol. i. Disc. 7. Serm. 34.

He much lamented the wars between England, Scotland, and Holland. He often told an intimate friend of his, that England's breach with Scotland, and the blood that was shed, together with the other sad consequences thereof, had made such impression upon his heart, that the sorrow would never be removed until his death. And, the sufferings both in Holland and England, in the sea fights, were an heavy burden upon his spirit.

^a Church Hist. Cent. 17. Book 11. Sect. 9.

^b Hist. Purit. vol. iv. Chap. 3.

With relation to his more particular character, as a Christian, the fruits, or graces of the Spirit, mentioned Gal. v. 22, 23. love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance, all shined with remarkable lustre in him. And the Lord very graciously added humility, as a crown to all his other graces. This set a lustre on the whole. He was indeed clothed with humility. And we may say with regard to him, what Dr Fuller says, concerning Dr John Reynolds, in point of humility: "Admirable that the whole should be so low, whose several parts were so high." He conversed most familiarly with the poorest Christians, even with babes in Christ; and was very communicative, "like a tree loaden with fruit, bowing down its branches to all who desired to ease it of the burden thereof." And few men of his estate, did so abound in works of charity. He often said, "It is a brave thing, when a man together with a full estate, hath a charitable heart." Sometimes upon special occasions, he gave away all the money that he had in the house. He frequently gave twenty shillings to a poor saint; and he had many experiences of God's gracious returns in such cases. By his last will, he gave twenty pounds to the godly poor of his own parish. And while he lived, he greatly abounded in kind and compassionate actions to the necessitous and afflicted saints around him. When he saw the Lord Jesus Christ an hungered, in his disciples and followers, or under any distress, he relieved as far as he could. And such charitable actions, comprehending all other fruits of faith, will be brought forth, and remembered with peculiar regard on the day of judgment, not at all as meritorious causes of salvation, but only as evident testimonies, proofs, and signs of true love to

^a Fuller's Church Hist. Cent. 17. Book 10. Sect. 3.

^b Fuller's Church Hist. as above.

God, of faith unfeigned, and of subjection to the Lord Jesus Christ in his offices of Mediator, Surety, Saviour, Redeemer, Prophet, Priest, and King. This is evident from Mat. xxv. 35—40.^a That alms-deeds should be remembered with peculiar regard on the day of judgment, was an opinion which early prevailed among the Jews; as appears by the Chaldee paraphrase on Eccl. ix. 7. which bears a remarkable resemblance to these words of Christ, Mat. xxv. 35, &c. and might perhaps be an imitation of them.^b And the saints in glory will be for ever reaping the harvest of these labours of love. Mr Whitaker's patience, and resignation to the sovereign will of God, were as remarkable, as his works of charity; but as these will come natively in course, in giving an account of his sickness and death, we shall pass them here.—He was an universal scholar, both in arts and languages; well acquainted both with the Fathers and Schoolmen. By much study, he had digested the whole body of divinity; was an acute and solid disputant, excellently versed in cases of conscience, and inferior to none in his acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures. Mr Calamy speaking of him says, "If I should enter upon his commendation, I might truly say what Nazianzen doth of his sister Gorgonia, that I have more cause to fear lest I should speak below, than above the truth; for he was a burning and a shining light in this our Israel. A messenger, and an interpreter one among a thousand; a Bezaleel in God's tabernacle; a true Nathaniel, who, by his integrity, humility, constancy, charity, publicness, and peaceableness of spirit, and by his diligence and faithfulness in preaching the gospel, made his life both amiable and desirable. I will say of him as it was said of Athanasius, that he was an adamant, and a load-stone. To all who conversed with him, he was a load-stone to draw their hearts to love him; but in the cause of God, and in reference to the truths of Christ, he was an unconquerable adamant. He was a Jeremiah, both in mourning for, and in witnessing against the sins of the times."^a— And Dr Fuller says, he was "a solid divine, and a man made up of piety to God, pity to poor men, and patience in himself.—His liberality knew no bottom but an empty purse; so bountiful was he to all in want."^b And Leigh, in his Treatise of Religious and Learned Men, says, "Jeremiah Whitaker, my worthy friend, a learned and pious divine of the Assembly, who was a man mighty in the Scriptures, of an humble melting spirit, laborious in his ministerial function, zealous for God's glory, and wonderfully patient in all the time of his heavy affliction."

^a See Dutch Annotations, and Dr Guise on the place.

^b Dr Doddridge's Note on Mat. xxv. 40. Mede's Works.

He had much interest in the hearts of persons of great eminence, who filled places of power and trust in the nation, because of his plainness, and the power of godliness, which did shine very brightly in his conversation. He gained much authority and reputation among all with whom he conversed; whether in town or country.

By much study, and hard labour, he was afflicted with various bodily diseases from his youth. In the latter part of his time, he was several years much distressed with the painful distempers of the gout and stone. God corrects his people because he loves them, in order to make them partakers of his holiness, that they may learn his law, and not be condemned with the world, Rev. iii. 19, Heb. xii. 5—11. 1 Cor. xi. 32. And his sorest chastisements are fruits of his fatherly care. Though the means be grievous, yet they are healthful to the soul, and the end is glorious, 2 Cor. iv. 17. Diseases are God's servants, they come and go at his sovereign appointment, who can bring meat out of the eater, and sweetness out of the strong.

"Ye saints of God, fresh courage take,
And thank him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence,
He hides a gracious face."^c

^a Calamy's Epistle prefixed to Mr Ashe's Sermon preached at Whitaker's Funeral.

^b Fuller's Worthies of England.

^c Cowper.

Notwithstanding the frequent return of those tormenting pains, he attended upon his ministry both at home and abroad, while he was able to creep into the pulpit. And though oftentimes he went halting thither, and full of pain, yet he had no appearance of any distemper, while he was there. He sometimes went upon crutches unto his own congregation. Yea, once he adventured to preach at Michael's Cornhill, when he was scarce able to get into the pulpit, and his friends with much difficulty helped him out of the church homeward.^a At other times, when his legs would not serve him, he rode to the church. And when he was by extreme pains taken off from his ministry, he told his intimate friends, that the pains which he felt were not so grieving to his spirit, as his inability for his work in the ministry. He often said, "If I could but preach, I should be much better." And he rejoiced with thankfulness, when in the times of weakness, he found himself not worse by preaching. He mentioned such experiences, as arguments to prevail with his friends, to comply with his preaching, when they endeavoured to dissuade him from it, as hurtful to his health. But about the beginning of November, the violent pain of the stone so increased, that he was confined to his bed or chamber, until his death, on the first of June. Many physicians in London, were consulted, and were very ready to serve him with their advice. They unanimously concluded, that his sharp pains proceeded originally from an ulcer in the kidneys, but immediately from an ulcer in the neck of the bladder, caused by a continual flux of ulcerous matter dropping down upon that part. And on account of the acuteness and quickness of the sense there, his pains were mostly in that place, though the fountain of them was from the kidneys. Several days of prayer and fasting were observed on his account. Mr Ashe says, "I never heard of any man so much prayed for, both in public and private. There was no particular case so frequently, so affectionately spread before God in most of the congregations about London as his."^b

^a Mr Ashe's Sermon at his Funeral, p. 54.

^b Ashe's Sermon at his Funeral, p. 65, and Clarke's Lives.

During his heavy affliction, he had the sweet experience of very particular manifestations of divine love unto his soul; and much assurance of God's fatherly love in Christ. In his addresses unto God, he constantly claimed interest in him; My God, and my Father. "For it is the very essence of justifying faith, to attach itself to the Surety, and appropriate what is his as its own." His confidence in the God of his salvation, his inward peace and joy, were the supports of his heart under all grinding pains. "My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever," Psal. lxxiii. 26. And, he was confident that mercies were remarkably mingled with all his grievous distempers. Nor did he doubt of the sanctification of all his sharpest afflictions, through the grace of God. Accordingly in his supplications to his Maker, he often said: "Consider and save me, for I am thine. How long, Lord, how long shall I not be remembered? Yea, I am remembered, blessed be thy name. This is a fiery chariot, but it will carry me to heaven. Blessed be God who hath supported me hitherto. And he who hath delivered will deliver. Thou, Lord, never forgettest them who put their trust in thee." When the extremity of a paroxysm had passed over, the smiles always returned in his countenance, and he spake concerning the tender mercies of God, which are over all his works, Psal. cxlv. 9. and contemplated heaven, with great delight. And though he trembled when his pains began, he said with a very becoming confidence, "Now in the strength of the mighty God, I will undergo these pains. O, my God, underneath put thine everlasting arms, and strengthen me." See Deut. xxxiii. 27. Thus when cast down, he was not destroyed, when perplexed, he was not in despair, his heart being fixed, trusting in the Lord. He often told Mr Ashe, his bosom-friend, that notwithstanding all his rentings and roarings, from which he expected no deliverance but by death, he would not for a thousand worlds change estates with the greatest man on earth, living in sin. Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace, Prov. iii. 17. Great peace have they who love thy law; and nothing shall offend them, Psal. cxix. 165. He was far from charging God foolishly; but was all submission to his sovereign will, believing that he did all well. "The way God leads his people may be crooked and dark, but verily it is a right way. Our lot may be greatly variegated with prosperity and adversity: the sunshine and the shade may frequently succeed each other; but all is well, and shall be well. Our Father in heaven is the Author of the blessed texture in our lot. All our chastisements are in love, and will terminate in our eternal happiness. Behold, happy is the man whom the Lord correcteth," And the kindness of his heavenly Father was such that Satan was never permitted to shake his confidence, nor dash his hopes. "They who trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever," Psal. cxxv. 1. And, he accounted the spiritual cordials, and divine supports, which he enjoyed liberally in his great distress, far superior to a deliverance from the gout, stone, and even death itself. He also viewed these extraordinary supernatural refreshments, as answers of the many prayers made to God in his behalf. And though it seemed good to his heavenly Father, to deny that ease and recovery much and earnestly begged, he granted what was better for him. And, his case was very like that of the apostle Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 7, 8, 9. Many have understood Paul's thorn in the flesh of bodily pains: and Mr Baxter, being himself subject to a Nephritick disorder, or disease in the reins, supposes it might be the stone, or gravel. Be that as it may, the case otherwise is exactly parallel. Very importunate petitions were presented in both cases, that the affliction might be removed, if it were the will of the Lord, or at least moderated in some considerable degree. And such prayers were not in vain; for, though the Hearer of prayer did not entirely and fully indulge the very earnest request, he said to these remarkable subjects of his afflicting hand, in amazingly great condescension, My grace is sufficient for thee, to support thee under these acute pains, and bitter afflictions, though I permit them to continue, which I now choose to do.^a Like Jonathan, he had and received his comfort at the end of a rod, that he might value it the more, and be more earnest and frequent in supplications to the God of his salvation. "In all our exigences, extremities, and complaints, let us apply to the Throne of Grace, and that blessed Redeemer, who intercedes before it, for proper assistance and relief. Nor let us be discouraged; though the first, or second address, should seem to be disregarded: The third or fourth, may be successful. And what, if we do not succeed to our wish in the immediate answer? Let it content us, that we may be assured by Christ of the sufficiency of his grace. In our weakness can he illustrate his strength. And, in that view too, may we glory in our infirmities."^b Heavy afflictions, sanctified, greatly contribute to the vigorous exercise of grace.

Mr Whitaker's patience was so eminent under his heavy affliction, that he might be celebrated as a second Job. And many who saw him in the racking pains of his last sickness, so frequently reiterated, and so long continued, were persuaded that the Lord had put him into that furnace, and kept him there, to be a pattern of patience to posterity. He was patient to a wonderful degree, as Cornelius Nepos says concerning Epaminondas, the Theban.^c In him we have a noble example of constancy and patience worthy of our most attentive consideration. Mr Ashe says indeed, he did roar many times till his throat was dry, but none ever heard him speak one word in the way of murmuring, or discontentment, on account of God's afflicting providence. He took up Job's complaint, Wherefore is light given to him who is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul; which long for death, but it cometh not, and dig for it more than for hid treasures; which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the grave?" Job iii. 20—22. But he always expressed the utmost submission to the sovereign will, and good pleasure of the Lord his God. He only discovered, that he felt, and was sensible when God touched him. "Insensibility of mind is so far from resignation, that it is one of the sorest judgments on earth, not to grieve when we are afflicted of the Lord." When asked, how he did, he frequently answered: "The bush always burning, but not consumed. Though my pains be too great for the strength of nature, yet they are not above the supports of grace." Under the copious influences of the Spirit of grace and of supplication, in the abundant effusions of the soul, in holy divine expostulation and prayer, he expressed himself as follows: "O, my God, help! Father of mercies, pity! Do not contend for ever. Consider my frame that I am but dust. My God, who hath made heaven and earth, help me! Oh, give me patience, and inflict what thou wilt! If my patience was more, my pain would be less. Dear Saviour, where are thy bowels! Why dost thou make me an astonishment to myself and others? Why dost thou cover thyself with a thick cloud, that our prayers cannot pass? Blessed is the man who endureth temptation. Lord, this is a sad temptation; stand by me, and say, It is enough. Am I not thy servant? Consider, Lord, that I am thy servant. O, these bitter waters of Marah! Lord, drop sweet comfort into these bitter waters! O the blood of sprinkling! Lord, the blood of sprinkling! Lord, that blood which extinguisheth the fire of thine anger! O that it may allay my burning pains! I am in a fiery furnace. Lord, be with me, as thou wast with the three children, and bring me out refined from sin! When I have sailed through the ocean of these pains, and look back, I see that none of them can be wanting! I flee unto thee, O my God: hide me under the shadow of thy wings until these terrible storms be overpast." By an attentive consideration of these pious breathings of soul, we may see, that God in Christ is the believer's only refuge in adversity, unto whom he cries for help.^a That the infinitely precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, our ever blessed Redeemer, is the only true cordial drop, which sweetens every affliction, in this life, however bitter. That this blood must be sprinkled upon us, and applied by the special appropriating acts of faith, under the influence of the divine, eternal Spirit of all grace, before we can enjoy the benefit of it. That the genuine children of God prefer deliverance from sin, to relief from trouble. And, that when affliction is sanctified unto us, we will see that it is all necessary, and that no single twig of the rod of any affliction could be wanting. Nor will such wish to have a single twig of the rod taken off.^b The subject of this Memoir was ready to acknowledge with David, that God afflicted him in truth and faithfulness. In these sore afflictions, he clearly saw by faith the God of his salvation, and was taught to believe, that they were far from being against him, but did all work, in concurrence with other dispensations, for his real good and everlasting advantage, Rom. viii. 28. In them, he saw the Creator and Sovereign Lord of the universe, who giveth not account of any of his matters, doing with his creature as he pleased, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped him, like Job, his companion in tribulation and patience, Job i. 20.^c He revered Jehovah, the only-wise God, with his whole soul and heart; and uttered the most honourable expressions in his commendation, when in the fire, and upon the rack. Some love-breathings of his pious soul unto his God and Saviour follow: "Good Lord, keep me from dishonouring thy Name by impatience. Oh, who would not, even in burnings, have honourable thoughts of God! Who that knoweth thee would not fear thee, O Lord, love thee, and honour thee! Lord, thou givest me no cause to have any hard thought of thee! Blessed be God there is ^a "Ergo te, rerum pater, invocavi,

^a See Doddridge on the place.

^b Doddridge, as above, Improvement.

^c C. Nep. Epam. Cap. 3.

Unum præsidium in malis." Buchanan, Psal. cxlii. 5.

^b See Evangelical Magazine for Nov. 1797. London.

^c See Christian Magazine, vol. vi. No. 60. p. 74. Edinburgh.

nothing of hell in all this ! Blessed be his name for Jesus Christ, and the revelation of the everlasting gospel. Who knoweth the power of thy wrath ? If it be so heavy upon thy servant here, how heavy shall it be to all those who shall endure it without mixture ! Blessed be God for the peace of mine inward man, when my outward man is so full of trouble. This is a bitter cup, but it is of my Father's mixing, and shall I not drink it ? Yes, Lord, through thy strength I will. This is my burden, and I will bear it." Upon any abatement of his pains, he was constantly employed in adoring and blessing the God of his salvation, whose way is in the sea, and his footsteps in the great waters. Upon such occasions, he used the following and similar expressions : " O, what a mercy is it that there is any mitigation, any intermission ! Lord, make me thankful." And turning himself to such as were around him, he often addressed them with the same gracious spirit, as follows : " O, help me to be thankful ! O, lift up a prayer for me, that I may be thankful ! O, what a mercy is this ! How much worse might this affliction have been ! I might have been distracted, or laid roaring under disquiet and anguish of spirit." In the deeps of his affliction, he always added a mixture of cheerful acknowledgements of God's goodness, giving hearty thanks to him. And this is both most seemly, and also very conducive to the prosperity of the souls of the righteous.^a And, as the Lord our God punisheth us less than our iniquities deserve, Ezra ix. 13. and makes the bitterest afflictions afford the most profitable instructions, there is ground of thanksgiving even for these. See Psal. xlix. 12. and cxix. 71. And " There is not any case incident to a Christian, but if he search thoroughly, there will be found some ground for thanksgiving and rejoicing, though not in himself, yet in God's dealing with him, either for mercies bestowed, or judgments not inflicted, Philip. ii. 27. for, while Paul commandeth them to exercise themselves, and cheer up one another with giving of thanks, instead of foolish talking and jesting, he supposeth there will be always reason of thanksgiving," Eph. v. 4.^a It is surely of the Lord's mercies we are not consumed altogether. All is mercy on this side hell. Why then should a living man complain? Let him rather give thanks. —He often said to his bosom friend, Mr Ashe, "Brother, through mercy; I have not one repining thought against God." As another, who died under a very painful disease, used to say familiarly, "Joseph may complain, but he dare not repine."^b This short speech made a very deep and sensible impression on Mr Ashe's heart; and moved his affections for him.

^a See Fergusson on Eph. v. 4.

When the time of his dissolution drew nearer, his pains became more violent; but the grace of God, which was with him, still supported him, and so wonderfully succoured him, that his most violent pains never abated either his faith or his patience. The comfortable evidence which he still enjoyed of a saving interest in the Lord Jesus Christ, and the very delightful prospect of his soon joining the general assembly of the spirits of just men made perfect, beyond the reach of sin, pain, and death, brought his mind into a calm resignation to the sovereign disposing will of God. And animated with the cheering, and well-grounded hope of eternal happiness, built upon the sure foundation which God hath laid in Zion, his soul was often filled with longing desires, to be with the Lord Jesus Christ, attended with the greatest holy submission to the will of God. Like Paul, "having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better," Phil. i. 23. He wished to be where his treasure and desires were; with Christ. The more the saints of God are pressed down to the earth by heavy afflictions, do they mount up to heaven in holy affections, when these troubles are sanctified to them. He rejoiced in the view of shaking himself from the dust, that his soul, like a bird set at liberty from its cage, might have full scope, and fly away in meditation, faith, and prayer, with joyful notes of praise to eternal glory. The following were some of his expressions: "O, my God, break open the prison-door, and set my poor captive soul free: but enable me to wait willingly thy time. I desire to be dissolved. Never was any man more desirous of life, than I am of death. When will that time come, when I shall neither sin nor sorrow any more? When shall mortality put on immortality? When shall this earthly tabernacle be dissolved, that I may be clothed upon, with that house which is from heaven? Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours; and follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth."

^a Fergusson as above.

^b Evangelical Magazine for Nov. 1797. London.

"Lord, I am pain'd; but I resign
To thy superior will:
'Tis grace, 'tis wisdom all divine,
Appoints the pains I feel.
Dark are thy ways of providence,
While those who love thee groan:
Thy reasons lie concealed from sense,
Mysterious and unknown.
Yet nature may have leave to speak,
And plead before her God,
Lest the o'er-burden'd heart should break
Beneath thy heavy rod."^a

Such as are of heavenly birth, being made truly wise unto salvation, who have their heart and their treasure in heaven, and are acquainted with real and substantial enjoyments, will look above this world, and all its fading allurements. They who are Christ's are dead to this world. The world is crucified unto them, and they unto the world, Gal. vi. 14. Such have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts, Gal. v. 24. Accordingly, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, they press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, Phil. iii. 13, 14. Wearied here, they wish to leave this vale of tears, looking for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, Heb. xi. 10. Where there is neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away, Rev. xxi. 4.

^a Watts' Remnants of Time, 5.

“ The soul that would be truly wise,
 And taste substantial joys,
 Must rise above this giddy world,
 And all its trifling toys.
 Our treasure and our heart's with God,
 We die to all on earth ;
 Our actions prove our words sincere,
 And shew a heavenly birth.
 Surmount, my soul, this earthly clod,
 And the vain things of time ;
 Ascend yon bright etherial road,
 And share the bliss divine.
 Wearied, I turn my eyes around,
 On all things here below ;
 And wish to quit this vale of tears,
 And to my Saviour go.
 Adieu, ye suns and rolling stars,
 And all your radiant fires !
 To nobler heights my spirit soars,
 To fairer worlds aspires.
 Away from all earth's dying things,
 My soul impatient flies ;
 To view the glories of her God,
 Beyond the azure skies.
 Author and Guardian of my life,
 Sweet source of light divine,
 And, all endearing names in one,
 My Saviour ! I am thine.
 What thanks I owe thee, and what love,
 A boundless endless store,
 Shall echo through the realms above,
 When time shall be no more.”^a

^a Evangelical Magazine, vol. v. No. 56. for Nov. 1797.

On the Sabbath seven-night before he died, his pains were very sharp. Notwithstanding, he employed the greatest part of the time of public worship in fervent prayer with those who attended him. His petitions then were mostly for the ministers of Christ, that he would accompany his ordinances, with his own power, and enable his ministers to speak unto the souls of the hearers. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; If I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy," Psal. cxxxvii. 5, 6. His sharp pains were sent by the Lord for wise and holy purposes. They served to quicken him to the exercise of prayer, and every good work. The same salutary effects were produced in the pious Psalmist, by the increase of such as troubled him, Psal. iii. 1—4. The people of God have prayed most feelingly, fervently, and forcibly, when their afflictions were sharpest. See this exemplified in the case of the children of Israel, Judg. iii. 8—15. In that of Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 16—18. In Hezekiah, 2 Kings xix. 15, 16. In Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, when told, that there was a great multitude coming against him from beyond the sea on this side Syria, 2 Chron. xx. 2—13. See Isa. xxvi. 16. Hos. v. 15. Acts vii. 59. 60. And, Jonah slept securely when at ease in the ship, but prayed fervently unto the Lord his God, by reason of his affliction, out of the fish's belly, Jonah i. 5. and ii. 1, 2. Our hearts are like flint stones, they must be smitten before they will send forth these sparks of devotion. And sharp afflictions are in the hand of the Lord our God, like the file and whetstone: they serve to give a keen edge to our faith, love, prayer, and other religious exercises.—Heavy afflictions are to the souls of believers in Christ, enriched with the graces of the Holy Spirit, like weights unto clocks; they make them go. They influence the motion of such souls to Christ for grace and relief, Hos. v. 15. Psal. iii. 3—8. In the remarkable subject of this Memoir, the graces of God did all eminently shine forth, to the glory of their Author, at this time. As Abraham's faith, Job's patience, and Paul's courage, did shine most illustriously in the fire of affliction; so did the grace of God in Whitaker now. When the Lord designs to glorify himself by his graces in his people, he will readily find means to draw them forth, unto the view of others. And he may effect this, by sharp pains, often reiterated, as in the case now before us. Having lighted such candles, they must not be put under a bushel; but made to give light to all who are in the house; all who come where they are. As his pains increased, the heavenly graces became more odoriferous. Like aromatic spices, the more they are pounded, the sweeter they smell.—Such as were best acquainted with him reckoned, that it was disputable, whether he preached more by the heavenliness of his doctrine, or by the holiness of his life. But they conclude, that it is certain, he preached as effectually by his sickness and death, as by either his doctrine or his life.^a He had such a tender feeling for his friends, that when his pains threatened to come with great violence he entreated them to withdraw from him, that they might not be distressed with his roarings. And, he often thanked God, that his compassionate friends were not under necessity to remain within the reach of his doleful lamentations.

At the near approach of death, his pains became so frequent, as to return every half-hour; and often every quarter; at last, twice or thrice in a quarter of an hour, which did soon exhaust his strength. The night before his death, Mr Ashe, who was his fidus Achates, faithful companion, and equally dear unto him as Jonathan was to David, upon hearing that he was not likely to live another day, went early in the morning to take his last farewell of him, till the heavens be no more. At this time, his bodily strength was very much abated. And, his friend finding that he could not speak without much difficulty, he spake the more unto him. He entered upon a conference with him in relation to the approach of his happy expected change. And, Mr Ashe's discourse on this occasion was very refreshing, through God's blessing, unto his soul. "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him who is weary," Isa. xl. 4. "And a word spoken in due season, how good it is!" Prov. xv. 23. It is like apples of gold in pictures of silver, Prov. xxv. 11. Like sound sleep and refreshing rest to the weary; and as sweet water from the pure running stream to such as are parched with thirst.^a—Mr Ashe minding him, that many of his friends intended to set apart that day in seeking the Lord by supplications in his behalf, desired him to say what in particular he would have them lay before the throne of grace. To this he replied, "Do not complain but bless God for me, and entreat him to open the prison-door." Here we see, that others also laboured in importunate prayers to God, for him, according to 2 Cor. i. 10, 11. Acts xii. 5—12. When one member suffers, all genuine members of the same one body participate in the sorrows thereof. It is only a Nero who can sit and sing while Rome burns. And this pious subject of divine chastisement desired that thanks may be given by many on his behalf. "As nothing can be more reasonable, than that mercies obtained by prayer, should be owned in praise."^b And one well observes, "Our best mercies are, by the blessing of God, made to spring out of our bitterest trials. We will remember, with wonder, love, and praise, all the way the Lord led us through the wilderness, to prove us and try us, and to do us good in our latter end. Gratitude is a sister to humility of mind; and the more humble we are, the more thankful will we be at all times."^c—And he still continued ardently to desire death. It is reported concerning Secundus, that he denominated death, "The wicked man's fear, and the godly man's wish." It was the ardent wish of this godly man. And viewing it disarmed of its sting, by the death of Christ, he considered it as the extinction of sin in him, a deliverance from his enemies, a cessation from all his troubles, the quiet rest of his body, and the freedom of his soul; making way for his full and uninterrupted enjoyment of God in Christ, as his sure, enriching, satisfying and everlasting portion, through all eternity. And with such views, he as earnestly wished for death, as ever any Jew did for the jubilee; a year of rejoicing, celebrated every fiftieth year among the Jews, in commemoration of their deliverance out of Egypt. No stranger ever desired more to be at home, than he wished to be in his heavenly Father's house where there is fulness of joy, and pleasures for evermore, Psalm xvi. 11. And the continual conclusion of his prayers was, "Come quickly, Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Mr Ashe, laying his hand upon Mr Whitaker's cold hand, covered with a clammy sweat, took his last farewell of him with a sore heart. Upon his departure, the last words, wherewith he addressed him were: "Brother, I thank you, I pray God bless you, and I bless God for you." That day of Mr Ashe's last interview with him was spent in supplications to God for him, at Peter's Cornhill, London. Here Mr Newcomen, quickened and assisted the prayers of his friends, in a sermon preached from John xi. 3. 4. insisting especially upon these words, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick. And Mr Jenkin endeavoured to moderate and regulate their sorrows, from Luke xxiii. 28.—Weep not for me. On this evening, he died, cheerfully resigning his soul into the hands of his gracious and merciful Redeemer, upon the first day of June, in the year 1654, about the fifty fifth year of his age.

^a See Calamy's Preface to Ashe's Sermon at his Funeral.

^a See Virg. Eccl. 5. 45, 46, 47.

^b Doddridge on 2 Cor. i. 11.

^c Christian Magazine, vol. vi. No. 59. Leumias.

After his death, his body was opened, when both his kidneys were found full of ulcers, and one of them swelled to an extraordinary bigness, through the abundance of purulent matter in it; and on the neck of his bladder was found a stone, about an inch and an half long, and one inch broad, weighing above two ounces, when first taken out; and also an ulcer which was gangrened, judged to be the cause of his death. All other parts of his body were found upon examination firm and sound.^a Hence learn, That the best of men may be subjected to the worst of diseases.

Here it may be asked; Why was a man of such distinguished piety subjected to endure so great a fight of affliction, and to encounter so many hardships?^b Or, state the question in the words of Gideon unto the angel of the Lord, Oh, my Lord, if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us? Judges vi. 13. To this we reply; There are many phænomena in those parts of the universe that come under our particular observation, the reasons and ends of which we cannot now understand. And, a great master of reasoning says, "The proper conduct in such a case, is to believe that there are most wise reasons for these things, though we do not now discern those reasons, and to argue from the uncontested characters of wisdom in things that we do know, that God most wise hath also acted with admirable wisdom in those things, the designs and ends of which we do not know. It would be wrong therefore to confine the measures of his wisdom precisely to what appeareth to our narrow apprehensions, in that part of his works which falleth under our immediate inspection. This was the great fault of the Epicureans, and other atheistical philosophers, who, judging by their own various views, urged several things as proofs of the want of wisdom and contrivance, which upon a fuller knowledge of God's works, furnish farther convincing proofs of the wisdom of the great Former of all things."^c And though it may be difficult for us, who have very contracted views of the Divine administration, and see not afar off, to reconcile such an afflictive dispensation of Divine Providence, as this before us, with the goodness of God, and his everlasting love unto his chosen; yet we may be assured, that it is altogether consistent therewith. The certainty a Ashe's Sermon at his Funeral, Clerk's Lives, and Burnham's Memorials.

b See Virg. Eccl. 1. 8, 9, 10, 11.

c Leland's View of Deistical Writers, vol. i. Letter 17. 5th edit. London.

hereof may appear, from the mode of reasoning above, and by the infallible testimony of Jehovah himself, Rom. viii. 28. "And we know that all things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." The apostle having taken occasion to hint at many gospel-privileges enjoyed, here adds, that though our afflictions may lie heavy upon us, and though our burdens may be long continued, as in this case; yet we assuredly know, that all things, which occur in the course of Divine Providence, either in their present and immediate, or future and more remote consequences, do and shall work together for real and everlasting good to them who sincerely and affectionately love the Lord their God. It is plain from the whole context, that Providential events are meant, and included under this expression; and especially extraordinary afflictive dispensations of Divine Providence.* And since these shall most certainly work together for the real and everlasting good of God's chosen, they must incontestibly be altogether consistent with the goodness of God, and his love to such as are called according to his purpose. This is very beautifully set forth, in a well-known verse, from an illustrious pen, and a pious heart:

" Good when he gives, supremely good,
Nor less when he denies;
Even crosses, from his sovereign hand,
Are blessings in disguise!"

How comfortable and animating to the believer in Christ, is this enlivening thought, that all dispensations of Divine Providence whatever, prosperous, or adverse, even the most distressing and afflictive, shall assuredly be directed by the only wise God, and over-ruled by his almighty power, and infinite goodness, for the temporal, spiritual, and eternal good of his chosen! But what is the meaning of this glorious co-operation? With what or with whom, shall these work together? To this we

a Doddridge, Poole, Burkitt, Guyse.

reply; With God only wise, whose kingdom ruleth over all, who can bring good out of evil, light out of darkness, and make his people's cross their way to their crown; with God's blessing, which makes them effectual for the benefit of his people; with his word, ordinances, Spirit, grace, mercy, and loving kindness; with the faith, hope, patience, and prayers of believers themselves; and with each other: The dispensations of Divine Providence ought not to be considered singly, or separately; especially such of them as are afflictive. Afflictions are God's physic. And, as in matter of physic, if some simples are used alone, they may prove hurtful, rather than effect a cure; but take them in composition, as made up by the direction of a skilful physician, and they prove an excellent medicine. Let us accordingly consider all the dispensations of Divine Providence together, in their connection, harmony, and effects; and thus we will see, that in the gracious issues of the sharpest afflictions, which the Lord allots any of his people in this world, he brings meat out of the eater and sweetness out of the strong. So, the heads of the leviathan, became meat to such as inhabited the wilderness, Psal. lxxiv. 14.^a And with such views, the saints are found saying, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted," Psal. cxix. 71.—Dr Leland has an excellent observation on this subject, which I must subjoin here, for the benefit of the reader, and as a cautionary remark upon the whole. "It is highly reasonable, that when we meet with any phenomena, which we cannot reconcile with our ideas of the Divine goodness, we should conclude, that it is only for want of having the whole of things before us, and of considering them in their connection and harmony, that they appear to us with a disorderly aspect. And it is very just in such a case, to make use of any reasonable hypothesis, which tendeth to set the goodness of God in a fair and consistent light."^b a See Wisheart's Theologia, vol. i. Disse. 5. Sermon 20.

^a His body was buried in the church of Mary Magdalen

b Leland's View, as above.

Bermondsey, on the 6th of June, 1654. His funeral was attended by a very great multitude of eminently godly persons, both ministers and others of different ranks. Mr Calamy says, that it may be said of him, as it is said of Stephen, that "devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." Many tears were shed on this occasion.

"What scenes of sorrow wake the soul to pain;
 What floods of anguish cloud the sick'ning eye?
 O, sons of Pity, pour the melting strain—
 O, sons of Pity, heave the plaintive sigh!"

I shall add here two passages from his last Will and Testament, the one expressive of the high estimation which he continued to have of the office of the holy ministry, until his departure from this world, and the other of the very low opinion, which he always had of himself. And these are given in his own words, and as written with his own hand. "For my son Jeremiah, my desire is, that he be bred a scholar, and that the Lord would spiritually incline his heart, freely to give up himself to the Lord, to serve him in the work of the ministry, which calling and employment, though now despised, I do esteem above all other in the world; and do commend it to all mine, that if the Lord bless them with sons, they would commend this calling to their posterity," Here we see one eminently pious and learned, who had well studied the controversies of the times in opposition to the holy ministry, giving his testimony in favour thereof, upon his death-bed, when about to give his account unto the Judge of all. And, this is certainly a strong testimony in behalf of the gospel-ministry. The other passage is: "I desire that at my funeral there may be no pomp; but that so poor a worthless wretch may be privately laid in the ground."

His Funeral Sermon was preached by Mr Ashe, who gave him a large and deserved encomium. And now the reader may see, in this Memoir, one of Israel's sons passing through the flood, the tempestuous and stormy sea of affliction, under the Captain of Salvation; the only wise God his Saviour marching in triumph before him, and all his malicious enemies behind him sinking like lead into the mighty waters.

“ Across the level bed of sand
The sons of Isra'l trod;
Behind them sunk the foe like lead,
Before them march'd their God.”^a

Many poems and elegies were composed on the occasion of his death, by several eminent divines, in and about London; as Jenkin, Jacobme, Robinson, Poole, Needler, Reynolds, and others. I shall subjoin one of these, which well deserves a place here.

ON THE DEATH OF MY DEAR FRIEND, Mr JEREMIAH WHITAKER.

“ If death be but a servant sent, to call
The souls of saints to their original;
Dear saint, thine was a noble soul, to whom
Three messengers were sent to call thee home;
A stone, an ulcer, and a gangrene too,
Three deaths to hasten that which one should do!
'Twas not because thy soul was deeper set
Than ours, within its house of clay; nor yet
Because thou wert unwilling to depart Thither, where long before had been thine heart.
They were not sent to hale, by violence,
A soul that ling' red when 'twas called hence.
God shew'd how welcome one death was to thee,
Who didst so meekly entertain all three.
Thus many deaths God's Isra'l did inclose,
The sea before, behind a sea of foes:

a Christian Magazine, vol. vi. No. 64. Viator.

On either side the jaws of mountains high :
 No way from death, but unto death to fly.
 Not to destroy them, but to let them see
 The power of love, which then would set them free.
 Thus Job's four messengers, which did relate
 The doleful story of his ruin'd state :
 And his three friends, who acted Satan's part,
 (He on his flesh, and these upon his heart)
 Who by disputing him into a curse,
 Would make his spirit's torment far the worse,
 Were, by God's wise disposal sent to show
 The strength he on his champion would bestow.
 Thus painters put dark grounds where they intend
 To overlay with finest gold, and lend,
 By deeper shadows, lustre to that face
 On which they mean their choicest skill to place.
 Thus workmen season much with sun and wind
 Those greatest beams which must the building bind, While smaller pieces, happ'ly, are put in
 When they come bleeding from the wood, and green.
 Oft, where is greatest grace, God's pleas'd to send Great conflicts, those great graces to commend.
 As the six-finger'd giant's sword did bring
 The more renown to little David's sling.
 The vanquish'd lion, and the conquer'd bear,
 Prepar'd that holy head a crown to wear.
 The angel wrestled first, and then did bless,
 And made the greater servant to the less.
 Pain was too great for thee, God's grace for pain,
 And made the greater serve the less again.
 Thy pains serv'd thee for glory, and did fit
 The head, on which a crown of life must sit.
 'This is God's method, to fetch joy from grief,
 To turn our sorrows unto our relief :
 To save by killing, and to bring to shore,
 By the ship's planks, which was quite broke before.
 And thus a barren womb first took the seed,
 Which did six hundred thousand people breed.
 That seed too must from knife and altar rise,
 And be before a fire a sacrifice.

Great preacher of thy heavenly Father's will,
 Thy tongue did many ears with manna fill.
 Thy life out-preach'd thy tongue, O blessed strife!
 Thy sickness the best sermon of thy life,
 Before each doctrine must be prov'd anew
 Thine end was one great proof that all was true.
 Before thou preach'd by weeks, but now by hours,
 Each minute taught thy mourning auditors;
 Each patient groan, and each believing eye,
 Was a new sermon in brachygraphy.^a
 When nature roars, without repining words;
 Grace in the mouth, when in the bowels swords;
 In midst of torments to triumph o'er hell;
 To feel God's arrows, yet his praises tell;
 Through thickest clouds to see the brightest light;
 In blackest darkness to have clearest sight,
 And with our Lord to cry, "My God, my God,"
 Upon a cross, under the sharpest rod;
 This is indeed to preach; this is to show
 Faith's triumph over nature's greatest woe.
 Then welcome fiery serpents, scorching sting,
 Which did thee thus to the brazen serpent bring.
 Then welcome whale, which, though it first devour, Renders at last the prophet to the shore.
 Well might'st thou bear the stone which death did throw,
 Who had'st the white stone, the new name to show,
 Well might'st thou be with such an ulcer calm,
 Whose soul was heal'd before with Heaven's balm.
 When spirits' wounds are cur'd, though nature groan,
 An heart of flesh can heal a back of stone.
 Let conscience have her feast, and let flesh roar,
 This pain shall make the other's joy the more:
 As many times those flowers most fragrant smell,
 Which nearest to some noisome weeds do dwell.
 Thus have you seen the forge most clearly glow,
 On which the smith doth drops of water throw.
 Keen frosts make fire the hotter, and deep night
 Causeth celestial lamps to shine more bright,

^a Brachygraphy is the art of writing in short-hand.

And by a dear antiperistasis,^a
 The child's distress sweetens the father's kiss.
 A wounded body yields to a sound soul;
 The joys of this do th' other's pains control.
 As in the day that the sun-beams appear,
 All other lesser stars do disappear.
 When heaven shines, and divine love doth reign,
 The soul is not at leisure to complain;
 Internal joy his heart so well composes,
 That they have judg'd their flames a bed of roses.
 But what shall England do, from whence are lopt
 Two of her richest acres, to heaven dropt?^b
 By loss of these two acres she's more poor,
 Than if she'd lost an hundred lordships more.
 'Twere a good purchase to gain these again,
 By giving to the sea all Lincoln-fen.
 Two little mines of gold do far surpass
 Huge manors, where the whole vesture is but grass.
 Learn we by them, what all men once will say,
 One perch of heav'n's worth the whole globe of clay."

ED. REYNOLDS, D. D.

Writings of Jeremiah Whitaker.

1. Christ the Settlement of Unsettled Times: A Sermon from Hag. ii. 7. before the House of Commons, at their Public Fast, in Margaret's, Westminster, 25th Jan. 1642. 4to. pp. 61. London, 1642. With an Epistle to the House of Commons, of four pages.

2. The Christian's Great Design on earth, is, To attain assurance for Heaven: Or, How in this life he may lay hold on Eternal Life: Set forth in a Sermon preached from 1 Tim. vi. 17—19. before the Lord Mayor, the Court of Aldermen, and other citizens of London, at a solemn anniversary meeting, 8th April, 1645. 4to. pp. 47. London, 1645. With four pages of an Epistle Dedicatory.

^a Antiperistasis is the action of opposite qualities; whereby the opposed becomes stronger.

^b Gataker, and Whitaker; whose names seem to have been originally written Gatacre, and Whitacre. See Gataker's Life.

3. The Christian's Hope Triumphant in these Glorious Truths;—1. That Christ the ground of hope, is God, and not mere man; against the Arians, and other unbelievers.—2. That Christ is the true Messiah, against the unbelieving Jews.—3. That there is another life beside this, against the gross Atheist.—4. That the soul of man is immortal, and doth not sleep till the day of the resurrection, against the error of some seeming Semi-Atheists.—5. How the hope of heaven should be attained, while here on earth, against the carnal worldlings.—6. How this hope may be discerned where it is, and attained where it is not, for the comfort of every poor Christian: in a Sermon preached from 1 Cor. xv. 19. before the House of Lords, in the Abbey Church at Westminster, 28th May, 1645. Fast, 4to. pp. 52. London, 1645.

4. The Danger of Greatness: Or, Uzziah's Exaltation and Destruction: A Sermon from 2 Chron. xxvi. 15, 16. Preached before the Lords, Commons, and Assembly of Divines, 14th of Jan. 1645, being a special day of Humiliation set apart to seek God, for his direction in settling the great work of Church-Government. 4to. pp. 44. London, 1646.

These are all his writings that I have seen, making a small quarto volume.

HENRY WILKINSON, B. D.

PASTOR OF WANDESDON, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HENRY WILKINSON was born in the Vicarage of Halifax, in Yorkshire, England, on the 9th day of October, in the year 1566. He received his education in Merton-college, Oxford. He made his first entry into the University in 1581. He was related to Sir Henry Savile, by whose favour he was elected Probationer Fellow of the College. In the year 1586, he proceeded in Arts, applied unto the study of Divinity, and after some time, he commenced Bachelor of Divinity; and in the year 1601, he became Pastor of Waddesdon in Buckinghamshire, where he continued in the laborious and faithful exercise of the holy ministry forty-six years. He married Sarah, the only daughter of Mr Arthur Wake, who is said to have been another zealous Puritan Divine, by whom he had six sons and three daughters. His wife was a woman of a very amiable character, and they lived together in a very becoming manner, more than fifty years. Mr Wilkinson was a man of considerable learning and piety, and being an old Puritan, as Wood says, he was elected one of the Assembly of Divines. It is certain, that he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, in 1643, and that his name is in the list of those Divines who met in the Assembly at Westminster; but it is said that he spent the most part of his time among his parishioners, by whom he was exceedingly beloved and revered. He died at Waddesdon, on the 19th of March, 1647, aged eighty-one years. His mortal remains were laid in the chancel of his own church, where, against the south wall, was a monumental inscription erected, of which the following is a translation: "Henry Wilkinson, forty-six years the faithful pastor of this church, was born the ninth day of October, 1566, and died the 19th day of March, 1647. He married Sarah, the only daughter of Arthur Wake of Sawey Forest, in the county of Northampton, with whom he lived in holy concord fifty-three years, and by whom he had nine children, six sons and three daughters. The remains of the aforesaid Sarah Wilkinson who lived to the age of seventy years, were laid by the side of her husband, leaving us an example of a most upright and holy life, and a reputation scarcely to be exceeded. John Wilkinson, son of the above, who died Dec. 18, 1664, aged 61 years, was also interred near them."

Our Mr Wilkinson has written and published, "A Catechism for the Use of the Congregation of Waddesdon, which has been oftentimes printed. Mr Wood says, that the fourth impression came out at London, 1637. Our author has also published, "The Debt-Book; or, a Treatise upon Rom. xiii. 8, wherein is handled the civil debt of money or goods." London, 1625. Mr Wood here adds, "and other things which I have not yet seen."

The celebrated Dr Henry Wilkinson, who comes next in our list, and was Margaret Professor at Oxford, and ejected at the Restoration, was his son.*

HENRY WILKINSON, D. D.

MINISTER IN LONDON, MARGARET PROFESSOR IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HENRY WILKINSON, son of the above-mentioned Henry Wilkinson, was born at Waddesdon, in Buckinghamshire, in England. He became a commoner of Magdalen-Hall, Oxford, in 1622, aged 13 years. There he made great proficiency in his studies, took the degrees in arts, became a noted tutor, master of the schools, and reader of divinity in his house. He entered into the holy ministry; and in the year 1638, he was admitted bachelor of divinity, and preached frequently in and near Oxford. He was a very celebrated preacher in Oxford about that time. He suffered for his conscientious freedom in preaching against the ceremonies and corruptions which then greatly prevailed. On the 6th of Sept. in 1640, he preached in his turn in Mary's Church, in Oxford, from Rev. iii. 16. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. This sermon gave great offence to the royal party. Wood says, that it was "very bitter against some ceremonies of the church, very base also and fac-tious, and intended merely to make a party for the Scots." He was summoned the same day to make his recantation, in a form which was then prescribed for him; but he positively refused. Upon this refusal, he was suspended from all execution of his ministerial function within the University and its precincts, until he should make his recantation. He complained to the Long Parliament of the usage which he had received from the Vice-chancellor of the University. Upon this, a copy of the sermon was sent to the Committee of Religion in the House of Commons, with the exceptions against it, and was by them perused; but they finding nothing in it, which could make him liable to punishment, they released him from his suspension, and gave order that his sermon should be printed, which was accordingly done. Mr Wilkinson now preached the kingdom of God, and taught those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him. He had undaunted courage to oppose all mankind, for the sake of what was right.—He was sometime Pastor of Faith's Under Paul's, in London; and was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and is marked as giving constant attendance during the session. He preached several times before the members of Parliament, and became Pastor of Dunstan's in the East. He was appointed afterward to go to Oxford with the Parliamentary visitors, and was one of those visitors. He was made Senior Fellow of Magdalen-college, and canon of Christ-church. He commenced Doctor of Divinity, and at Cheynell's departure, he became Margaret Professor of the University. After the Restoration of Charles II. he was ejected, and thereupon retired to London, and lived a non-conformist. In the latter part of his life, he lived at Clapham in Surrey, near London, where he had an open meeting after the indulgence in 1671; and where he died, in the month of June, 1675.—Wood says, that he was a good scholar, always a close student, and an excellent preacher.

* Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. Neal and Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

Under his name were published—A Sermon against Lukewarmness in Religion, from Rev. iii. 16. 4to. pp.

99. London, 1641.—Babylon's Ruin, Jerusalem's Rising: Fast Sermon from Zech. i. 18—21, before the House of Commons, 25 Oct. 1643. 4to. pp. 32. London, 1643, and 1644.—The Gainful Cost: Fast Sermon before the House of Lords, from 1 Chron. xxi. 24. Nov. 27, 1644. 4to. pp. 32. London, 1644.—“Miranda, Stupenda; or, The Wonderful and Astonishing Mercies which the Lord hath Wrought for England, in Subduing and Captivating the Pride, Power and Policy of his Enemies;” Thanksgiving Sermon from Numb. xxiii. 23, before the House of Commons, 21 July 1646. London, 1646.—He has also a Sermon in the Morning Exercise at Cripple-gate, concerning our danger in things lawful. Another in the Supplement to it, of doing all things in the name of Christ. And a third in that against Popery; proving the Pope to be Antichrist, or the Man of Sin.

THOMAS WILSON, A. M.

MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT OTHAM AND MAIDSTONE IN KENT,
AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

THOMAS WILSON was born at Catterly in the county of Cumberland, in England, in the year 1601. His parents were sober and honest, had a competent estate, and were in good reputation among their neighbours. He was early sent to school, where his proficiency in learning was great; and even exceeded expectation. It is said, that he far excelled all his fellows. He had a sharp wit, a large memory, and was very bookish. He was sent to the university of Cambridge, before he was seventeen years of age, and admitted there into Christ's college; where he was greatly admired for his indefatigable industry, and very great progress in useful learning, and where he proceeded in arts. No day without doing something, might have been written over the door of his study. When engaged in academical learning, he did not neglect divinity, nor reading the Holy Scriptures. From a child he knew the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make wise to salvation. The Bible was exceedingly precious to him; and he read much in it. It is said, that, before he was bachelor of arts, he had read Fremelius and Junius on the whole Bible, three times over. His bodily constitution, which was strong and healthful, enabled him to apply unweariedly to his studies.

Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol ii. 2 edit.

Upon his leaving the University, he taught school for about four years at Chartwood, in the county of Surrey, employing all his vacant hours in preparation for the holy ministry. Probably, he derived considerable benefit, in his studies, from the Rev. Mr Bristow, minister of Chartwood, where he was employed in teaching. Mr Bristow is said to have observed Mr Wilson's fitness for the work of the ministry, and to encourage him in going forward to that arduous work, though the want of him was a considerable loss to Mr Bristow and to his parish. Mr Wilson sometimes said, "That he knew no calling, except the ministry, wherein a man might be so serviceable to God, as in teaching youth." He entered into the holy ministry at Capel, in the same county, where he had been employed in teaching youth. There, by his judicious preaching, and holy example, he continued some time, directing the people in the way to eternal life. Though he received little or nothing for his labours, he was not the less faithful and diligent in promoting the welfare of their souls. He sought not theirs, but them, and was highly esteemed by the people, and by the godly ministers in the neighbourhood. He continued not long at Capel, but removed to Farlington, near Portsmouth, in Hampshire, where he laboured among very ignorant and heathenish people, endeavouring, by the diligent use of means, to instruct and reform them. He soon removed again from that place to Teddington, near Kingston-upon-Thames, in the county of Surrey. In this situation, he continued several years, and his labours were crowned with remarkable success. He was made a blessing to many souls. During his abode at Teddington, he much desired to visit his native country, where his relations and friends lived. He was then about twenty-six years of age. That visit was highly beneficial to many persons. While he was in Cumberland, he was desired to preach in Penrith, a large market-town, in that county. In that place, for a long time, a considerable market for all kind of food had been attended every Lord's day, until nine of the clock in the morning. But Mr Wilson, having preached there two or three sermons, prevailed upon the ministers and other persons of the town to use means for the reformation of that abuse of the Lord's day. The means were crowned with success. A proclamation was made on the day of their weekly market, "That no person, for the time to come, should bring any victuals or ware whatsoever to be sold on the Lord's day, but that Saturday should be the time for the sale of their commodities." And it is said that for many years after, the people did forbear to sell any thing on the Lord's day, in that town. A due regard for the Lord's day, has generally been accounted a proper touch-stone of any person's religion, and a good evidence of the vigorous exercise of divine grace in the soul. Pious persons, in all ages and countries, have universally attended to the sanctification of the Sabbath-day. In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine presses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all burdens, which they brought into Jerasalem on the Sabbath-day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals. There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, who brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath-day?—And some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath-day.—And I commanded the Levites, that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates to sanctify the Sabbath-day, Neh. xiii. 15, 16, 17—19—22.

Mr Wilson's next removal was to Otham near Maidstone, in the county of Kent. At Otham, he was made the instrument of awakening many careless sinners, of their conversion, and of building them up in faith and holiness. Multitudes flocked to attend his ministry from Maidstone and its vicinity; and, in a short time, the church was found too small to contain the people who assembled. The inhabitants of Maidstone were, at that time, badly accommodated with the ministry of his word. Alas! when the children asked bread, he who was their spiritual father, by profession and office, gave them only stones. Their souls were famished for want of wholesome spiritual food. Mr Wilson was a faithful and wise steward, who gave every one his portion of meat, in due season. He preached the terrors of the law to those persons, to whom terror belonged; and to such as came to him trembling, and crying out, Sir, what shall I do to be saved? he was a Barnabas, a son of sweet consolation. He beautifully displayed the unsearchable riches of divine grace, in the Lord Jesus Christ, unto sinners ready to perish. His doctrine was according to godliness; and his chief aim was to glorify God, and to win souls unto Christ. He neither sought to please the fancy, nor to gain the applause of his auditory, by the enticing words of man's wisdom. And, in obedience to the divine command, he preached the word, both in season and out of season; not only twice on every Lord's-day, but also frequently on other days; and on different occasions, when partial and worldly men reckoned, that his preaching was unseasonable. His great popularity and usefulness soon awakened the envy of profane sinners, and also of several neighbouring ministers; but he constantly went on without dismay, trusting in the Lord, who, with the blessing which alone makes rich, crowned his labours with great success. He continued to be very strict and zealous observer of the Lord's-day; always using means for checking the profanation of the day, and for promoting reformation.

Notwithstanding Mr Wilson's great labours and usefulness, he was at length silenced for refusing to read the profane Book of Sports. In the month of April, 1634, he was inhibited by Archbishop Laud's Vicar-general, from part of his public ministerial exercises. But, upon the publication of the Book of Sports, he refused to read it, when the Archbishop sent for him to Lambeth; and, April 29th, 1635, no less than fourteen charges were exhibited against him, to each of which he gave his answer, May 28th following, 1635. All these charges, together with Mr Wilson's answers, are too long for our insertion, in this place; but we shall here give the charge, with Mr Wilson's answer, respecting the Book of Sports.

Char. You refused to read the King's Declaration for Sports on Sundays, and spoke disdainfully to the Apparitor and Officer of the court.

Ans. I said unto the Apparitor, "Remember you to keep holy the Sabbath day;" and I said no more. I refused to read the Book, not out of contempt of any authority, but as being commanded by no law. The King's Majesty doth not in the Book command or appoint the minister to read it, nor it to be read, but published. Neither came it with, nor do I know of any seal to confirm it. And seeing there is no penalty threatened, nor authority given, that I know of, to any one to question those persons who refuse to read it, my refusal to read it was upon sufficient grounds of law and conscience; which, for the satisfaction of this high court, and to clear myself from contempt, I shall briefly express myself thus: His Majesty's express pleasure is, that the laws of the kingdom, and the canons of the church, be observed in all places of the kingdom; and, therefore, in Kent, and in Otham: but this book, as I conceive, is contrary to both. It is contrary to the statute laws, Edward VI. Anno 5. Cap. iii. Caroli, Anno 1, Cap. 1, & Can. 13.—Our Church is against it. It is contrary to the ecclesiastical laws.—It is contrary to the Holy Scriptures, Exod. xx. Isa. lviii. 13.—It is contrary to the councils.—It is contrary to divines, both ancient and modern; as Augustine, Chrysostom, Irenæus, Ignatius, Babington, Zanchy, Junius, and Alsted.—And it is contrary to reason. Mr Wilson enlarges on these topics, in a very judicious manner.

It evidently appears, that Laud had laid the snare to catch Mr Wilson, chiefly for refusing to read the Book of Sports. And in this, that great oppressor of the Lord's heritage succeeded according to his wishes: for Mr Wilson's answers, in which he explicitly declared his refusal to read the Book, were no sooner given, than the proud archbishop haughtily replied, I suspend you for ever from your office and benefice till you read it. And this eminently pious and laborious servant of the Lord Jesus Christ continued suspended for about the space of four years. About the same time, he was committed to Maidstone jail for non-conformity, but how long he remained in that confinement, I cannot inform the reader. At the expiration of the above period, he was brought into the high commission court by means of the archbishop; and, to his great cost and trouble, was again prosecuted for the same crime.

While Mr Wilson remained under suspension, not being satisfied with the ministry of his successor at Otham, he removed to Maidstone, where he gave some private instructions among his friends, from whom he received some external support, both for himself and for his family. His malicious enemies, at the same time, traduced his character, and represented him as a favourer of division. With a view to wipe off that base reproach, he addressed a respectful letter to the parishioners of Otham, warmly exhorting them "to fear God and honour the King, and to walk in love toward each other; and not to nourish in themselves any dislike of government, or contempt of those whom the Lord had set over them." This letter, for the information and satisfaction of all persons, was publicly read to the congregation, by Dr Tuck, on the Lord's day, without the appointment of Mr Wilson. The news of this affair soon reached London, when Mr Wilson and Dr Tuck were cited to appear before the high commission court. Mr Wilson was charged in that court with having sent a scandalous and offensive letter to Ot-ham, to nourish schism, and to confirm the people in the dislike of government. Upon that charge being presented against him, he readily acknowledged that he had written a letter to the people of Otham, but positively denied its bad tendency. He said, "I know that it was to exhort the people to fear God and the King, and not to meddle with those who are given to change; to walk in faith and love, and to call upon God: but I utterly deny all occasion of derogating from the church of England, or confirmation of any in the dislike of government, and protest against all aspersions and imputation of schism or scandal: neither did I direct any person to read it, nor intended or desired that it should be read in the church." And notwithstanding all that both Mr Wilson and Dr Tuck could allege in their own defence, they were obliged to continue their attendance on the court, for the space of three years, to their great cost and trouble. Dr Tuck's case was peculiarly distressing; for, on account of bodily infirmities, he was not able to ride, and under the necessity of making all his journies on foot, at the distance of more than thirty miles.

During Mr Wilson's suspension, a neighbouring minister, who eagerly wished to obtain his benefice, commenced a plea against him, with a view to eject him altogether out of Otham; but his patron made good his title, and so disappointed his adversary. In the year 1639, the Scots having entered England, and a Parliament being called, Laud took off Mr Wilson's suspension. But his troubles and sufferings were not then at an end, for, on Sep. 30th, in 1640, he was cited to appear before the archbishop's visitors at Feversham in Kent, together with other ministers in that county, to answer for not reading the prayer against the Scots. Upon the appearance of those ministers, Mr Edward Bright, being called first, was asked whether he had read that prayer; and when he said that he had not, the archdeacon immediately suspended him both from office and benefice, without admonition, or even giving him the least time for consideration. That tyrannical court often proceeded in a very summary manner. Mr Wilson, who was a witness of this rash procedure, and now perceived that the service was to be much hotter than he had expected, was next called. When he was asked whether he had read the prayer against the Scots, he answered in the negative; adding, "because in the rubrick of the Common Prayer, it is enjoined that no prayer shall be publicly read, excepting those which are contained in the Book of Common Prayer, and that prayer against the Scots was not there." This very unexpected answer so puzzled and confounded the archdeacon that he did not know what to say. It cooled his fury, and caused him to proceed more deliberately with Mr Wilson than he had done with Mr Bright. He allowed him fourteen days for consideration, and then he was to deliver his answer at Canterbury; but whether he delivered any other answer, and what followed respecting that case, we are not able to inform the reader.

About the same time, a warrant was issued from the Lords of the private council, among whom were Archbishop Laud and the Bishop of London, to apprehend Mr Thomas Wilson of Otham, and to bring him before them. A pursuivant was sent with this warrant to bring Mr Wilson to London. We are not informed for what crime this prosecution was raised; but there is sufficient ground to conclude, that it was for the great sin of nonconformity. The pursuivant, having received his warrant, went without delay to Otham; and though he heard Mr Wilson preach, and was afterward in the same room with him, yet he escaped out of his hands. Mr Wilson, suspecting him as soon as he entered the room, retired and concealed himself, and so was delivered out of the snare. Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. Our help is in the name of Jehovah, who made heaven and earth.—The zealous pursuivant was exceedingly enraged at his loss; but upon becoming a little cooler, he said, "that he had been a messenger to the council-table thirty-six years, and was never so served before."

Mr Wilson, having, in the goodness of Divine Providence, escaped that dangerous snare, withdrew from the furious storm until the meeting of the Long Parliament, when he went to London, and his case and petition were presented to the House of Commons. The House appointed a committee to take his case into consideration; and, Nov. 30th, 1640, Mr Rouse, who was one of that committee, reported to the house, "That Mr Wilson had been suspended four years from his living, worth sixty pounds a-year, only for not reading the Book of Recreations on the Lord's day; that the archbishop himself had suspended him; and that for three years he had attended upon the high commission court." The House therefore resolved, That Mr Wilson had just cause of complaint; and that there was just cause for the House to afford him relief. Upon the presentation of his petition, Sir Edward Deering, who was one of the members for the county of Kent, said, Mr Wilson, your petitioner, is as orthodox in doctrine, as laborious in preaching, and as unblemished in life, as any minister we have. He is now separated from his flock, to both their griefs: for it is not with him as with many others, who are glad to set a pursuivant on work, that they may have an excuse to be out of the pulpit; it is his delight to preach." Sir Edward farther observes respecting Mr Wilson, "He is now a sufferer, as all good men are, under the general obloquy of a Puritan. The pursuivant watches his door, and divides him and his cure asunder, to both their griefs. About a week since, I went to Lambeth, to move that great bishop (too great indeed) to take this danger from off this minister, and to recall the pursuivant. And I did undertake for Mr Wilson, that he would answer his accusers, in any of the King's courts at Westminster. The bishop made me answer, 'I am sure that he will not be absent from his cure a twelvemonth together.'"

Upon the above resolution of the House of Commons, Mr Wilson was released from his troubles, and returned to his charge and labours at Otham. In the year 1643, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and though at a considerable distance, he constantly attended, and also supplied his flock on the Lord's day. He was very much esteemed in the Assembly for his meek and humble deportment, and his grave and judicious discourses and counsels. Having continued some time at Otham, he removed to Maidstone, the county-town of Kent, where he remained until his death. Here his chief care was to promote the reformation of the church, and to administer the sacraments, according to his views of the word of God. In order to this end, he preached particularly upon the necessity of observing scriptural discipline, and the qualifications which were really necessary to the enjoyment of church-fellowship. Impressed deeply by the sense of duty, and very eager to dispense the divine light of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, which burned with great ardour in his own breast, he disengaged himself from this world, and was entirely devoted to the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. He met with considerable opposition at first, but by prudence and perseverance, trusting in Jehovah, in whom there is everlasting strength, things were brought to a favourable issue.

Mr Wilson laboured indefatigably in discharging the numerous duties of his office. He discharged the duties of the Lord's day, with exceedingly much pious zeal, and exemplary devotion. He commonly observed the following method : he continued his studies on Saturdays very late, often till about midnight, that he might be the better prepared for the important work of the Lord's day. He rose ordinarily by two or three o'clock on the Sabbath morning, and was much displeased with himself if he was at any time later. About seven he came out of his study, and called his family together, when he read and expounded a portion of the Holy Scriptures, requiring those persons who were present to give some account of the exposition ; then sung some part of a psalm, and concluded with prayer. About nine o'clock he went to church, and entered upon public worship by singing part of a psalm commonly, then prayed for the divine blessing which makes rich, and expounded in the Old Testament, sometimes three, four, or more, verses, continuing about an hour, in that exercise ; then, beside singing and prayer, he preached about an hour, and concluded. Then, going home, he constantly prayed with his family before dinner; and afterward, he spent some time with them in singing and other religious exercises. In the afternoon, he observed the same method in the public worship as in the morning; only his exposition was upon some part of the New Testament. Mr Wilson is said to have been an excellent expositor of the Holy Scriptures; and well acquainted with Junius, Tremellius, Piscator, Beza, Calvin, and several other commentators. It is said, that his expositions much resembled those of Mr Hutchison on the Gospel of John; but that he was fuller and larger than Mr Hutchison. The public services of the day being ended, Mr Wilson called his family together, when many neighbours attended, then they repeated the sermons and expositions, upon which he sung a psalm and concluded with prayer. After this he went to a friend's house in the town, where many attended, and engaged in the same exercises. He administered the Lord's Supper once a month; with much holy fervour: and, it is said, "that some of the communicants have thought themselves in the suburbs of heaven, when they joined with him in that ordinance, in which he commonly spent an hour and half."—He sanctified the Lord's day, by spending nine or ten hours in public and private worship, beside what time he spent in secret religious exercises. He also delivered weekly lectures, attended meetings for religious conference, and engaged in catechizing. He was a diligent labourer in the Lord's vineyard, and found his reward in the labour. When his friends attempted to dissuade him from such intense application, he was always deaf to their counsel, saying, "Would you have my Lord, when he comes, to find me idle?" He was persuaded that God makes no difference between an idle and an evil servant. We surely cannot but admire the benevolent exertions of this great and good man.

Mr Wilson was also very exact in setting a good example before all persons, and especially before his children and servants, knowing that inferiors are much influenced by the deportment of their superiors. What he preached, he practised all the week. In all things, he shewed himself a pattern of good works. He constantly exemplified his own wholesome instructions. He was a very strict observer of the Sabbath day, and eminently successful in promoting the due observation of it at Maidstone, as well as at other places. One of the judges noticing this at the assize, publicly declared, that, in all his circuit there was no town where the Lord's day was so strictly observed. All Mr Wilson's fervour was for some time exercised, in promoting the welfare of Maidstone. By his preaching and example, he excited those persons to engage in family worship who had formerly neglected it. They performed it both morning and evening. And, as they sung when they read the word of God and prayed, persons walking in the street, about nine and ten o'clock in the morning, might hear singing of Psalms in many families. This was a plentiful source of joy and gratitude to every mind which was seasoned with genuine piety. Mr Wilson was a man of a very courageous spirit, and feared no obstacles in the way of duty. Like the Roman Cato, he had "a resolution, a steadiness, and a composure of mind, not to be moved by flattery, nor to be shaken by threats." He feared God, and none else. He was like one of the celebrated ancients, who, when a threatening message of death was sent to him, desired the messenger to tell the Empress, I fear nothing but sin. Mr Wilson discovered much holy courage in reproofing sin, and in appearing for the defence of the gospel. He was firmly persuaded, that the Lord would take special care of his own cause, whatever sufferings his servants might endure, therefore, when trials came upon them, he said, with Luther, "I had rather fall with Christ than reign with Cæsar." He lived much above this world. His treasure was in heaven, and his heart was there also; as appears from the following anecdote:—At the insurrection in 1648, the soldiers took from him a legacy of a hundred pounds left by a friend to his eldest daughter, though it was soon restored. But when the money was gone, upon being asked whether he was not much troubled, he replied, "No; I was no more troubled when I heard that the money was carried out of my house, than I was when I heard that it was brought into it." And upon being asked what frame of spirit he was in, when the town and county were in arms, and some base and profane wretches reproached him, when he was going out of the town, taking his horse by the bridle, and twice or thrice brought him back, crying aloud, Wilson, Wilson, Where is your God now? Where is your God now? He replied, "I then thought on that text, My God is in Heaven, and hath done whatsoever he pleased." Psal. cxv. 8. With much patience, he beheld the frowns of the great, and heard the scoffs of the vulgar.

But Mr Wilson's eminent piety, humility, and integrity, did shine with peculiar lustre, in his affliction and death. When the Bridegroom came, he had his lamp trimmed, oil in his vessel, and his light burning. He was waiting for the coming of his Lord. And he endured his acute pains with great patience. He sometimes mourned, but he never murmured. He cheerfully submitted to the rod, in the hand of his heavenly Father. When lying upon his death-bed, he called his family around him. He desired his wife not to be discouraged, nor to sorrow as those who have no hope; but to trust in the Lord her God, in whom there is everlasting strength, and to continue in his service. He warmly exhorted his children to fear God, and directing his speech to his eldest daughter, he said, "Look to it, that you meet me not at the day of judgment in an unregenerate state." He commended all his children to the Lord, and left them in his hand. When Christian friends came to visit him, his mind seemed to collect new vigour, and he earnestly exhorted them to read the Holy Scriptures, to esteem highly and meditate much on the promises, to be holy in their conversation, and to attend divine ordinances with all diligence. He highly praised God, and spoke much of the preciousness of Christ, and said, that "one promise was more precious than a world." The prospect of his approaching death was very comfortable to him. To a pious lady of his acquaintance, who was leaving Maidstone, he pleasantly said, "What will you say, good Mrs Crisp, if I get the start of you, and get to heaven before you get to Dover." Another person saying, Sir, I think you are not far from your Father's house; he replied, "That is good news indeed, and is enough to make one leap for joy." To those who mourned over him, he said, "Praise God, who has suffered me to live so long to do him some service; and now I have finished the work appointed for me, that he is pleased to call me away so soon. He died in the exercise of faith and hope, commending his spirit into the hands of his dear Redeemer, on the Lord's day, toward the end of the year 1653, aged about fifty-two years. He had a strong constitution, a clear understanding, a quick invention, a sound judgment, a tenacious memory, and was a good scholar, a hard student, well read both in ancient and modern authors, excellent preacher, an eminent Christian, and clothed with humility. Mr Wilson was twice married, and by his second wife, he had eleven children, ten of whom were living at his death. Mr J. Wilson, ejected in 1662, is supposed to have been a son of his.

Our Mr Wilson was author of a sermon preached from Heb. xi. 30. before the House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, Sept. 28th, 1642. This sermon is entitled "Jericho's Down-fall, 4to pp. 48. London, 1643. I have not seen any more of Mr Wilson's writings. I have seen some Poems which were made upon his much lamented death. We rejoice at seeing the Muses twine garlands for the brow of such a man as Mr Wilson."

a Life of Mr Wilson, printed in the year 1672, and Broome's Lives of the Puritans, vol. iii. London, 1813.

FRANCIS WOODCOCK, A. B.

MINISTER IN LONDON, AND ONE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES
AT WESTMINSTER.

FRANCIS WOODCOCK was born in the city of Chester, the capital of Cheshire, in England, in the year 1614. He received his education in Brazen-nose college, Oxford, where he took one degree in Arts. He entered into the holy ministry while he was at the University, and was episcopally ordained, soon after which he removed from that seat of learning, and had a charge of souls bestowed upon him. Wood says, that "he was always Puritanically affected;" which some persons will account to bad character. Accordingly, upon the commencement of the differences between the King and the Parliament, he readily espoused the cause of the latter, and was afterward chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster; and it is said, that he assiduously attended during the whole session. Being brought up to London, he was chosen Lecturer of Lawrence-Jewry, and frequently preached at Olaves in Southwark, to which he was afterward appointed minister by an ordinance of Parliament, which was dated July 10th, 1646. He took the Covenant with the rest of his brethren, and was chosen Procurator to the University of Cambridge. He preached several times before the House of Commons; and some of his sermons which he preached to that learned and respectable auditory have been published, and are still extant. He died in the midst of his days and of his usefulness. Wood says, that he died in 1651, or thereabout; but Mr. Brook says, that he died in the year 1649, aged thirty-five years. His remains were interred in Olaves' church, Southwark. He was esteemed a good scholar, and an excellent teacher.^a—Mr Woodcock died young: but Hooker said of

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

that famous Prince, Edward the sixth, King of England "That though he died young he lived long, for life is in action." And the courtiers of Henry fourth, King of France, one day complimenting him upon the strength of his constitution, and telling him that he might live to be eighty years of age; he replied, "The number of our days is reckoned. I have often prayed to God for grace but never for a long life. A man who has lived well has always lived long enough, however early he may die."

Mr Woodcock has written and published;—1. The Two Witnesses; in several Lectures at Lawrence-Jewry London, on Rev. xi. 3, &c. with the great Question discussed, Whether the two Witnesses were slain or not 4to. London, 1643.—This work was made public by an order from the Committee of the House of Commons dated April 27, 1643. It was afterward reprinted.—2. Christ's Warning piece, Giving Notice to Every One to Watch and Keep Their Garments: delivered in a Sermon at Margaret's, Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons; at their solemn Fast, from Rev. xv. 15. Oct. 30, 1644. 4to. pp. 32. London, 1644.—3. Lex Talionis; or, God Paying Every Man in His Own Coin: a Fast Sermon from 1 Sam. ii. 30. before the House of Commons, July 30th, 1645. 4to. London, 1645 and 1646.—4. Joseph Paralleled by the Present Parliament, in His Sufferings and Advancement: A Sermon preached from Gen. xlix. 23. 24, before the House of Commons, on their Solemn Day of Thanksgiving, Feb. 19th, 1645, or 1646. 4to. London, 1646.

"The universal friend, so formed to engage,
 Was far too precious for this world and age.
 Years were denied, for (such his worth and truth) Kind Heaven has call'd him to eternal youth."

a Anecdotes of Distinguished Persons, vols. i. and iv.

THOMAS YOUNG, D. D.

MINISTER OF STOW-MARKET, AND A MEMBER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

THOMAS YOUNG was an eminently learned and pious divine. Mr Brook says,—“ This pious and learned divine was probably educated in the University of Cambridge. He was afterward preacher to the English merchants at Hamburgh; and, upon his return to his native country, he became vicar of Stow-market in Suffolk, in which situation he continued almost thirty years. He was a person of great learning, prudence, and piety, and discovered great fidelity and ability in the work of the ministry.”—In the year 1643, he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and proved himself to be an eminently distinguished member of that illustrious body during the whole session. He was one of those who reasoned for the divine institution of the ruling elder, in that Assembly, and had an active hand in the Directory for reading of Scriptures, and singing of Psalms.* Upon being called to London, he was chosen pastor of Duke’s-place in the city. In 1645, he was appointed one of the committee of accommodation; and about the same time he was chosen master of Jesus College, Cambridge, by the Earl of Manchester. In that eminent and public station, he displayed his great abilities, and was highly useful, until he was turned out of his place, in the year 1650, for refusing the engagement. Upon this he most probably retired to Stow-market, where he afterward died, in the year 1655, and his remains were interred in the church under a marble stone, with a monumental inscription.

a Baillie’s Letters, vol. i. pp. 401, and 431.

Mr Baker says, that "he left behind him the character of a learned, wise, and pious man." Mr Leigh, in his Treatise of Religious and Learned Men, p. 369, styles him "a learned divine, one very well versed in the Fathers, and the Author of that excellent Treatise, entitled Dies Dominica." He was also one of the authors of Smectymnuus.^b—I have seen an excellent Sermon, both in England and Scotland, by Thomas Young, seemingly the same divine, entitled, "Hope's Encouragement pointed at, in a Sermon preached from Psalm xxxi. 24. in Margaret's, Westminster, before the Honourable House of Commons, at the Solemn Fast, Feb. 28th, 1643." 4to. pp. 38. London, 1644.

^a Neal and Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

SCOTTISH COMMISSIONERS.

WE come now to those eminent Ministers, who were Commissioners from the Church of Scotland to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. Fuller says; "As Livy calls the general meeting of Etolica, Pan-Etolium, this Assembly endeavoured to put on the face of Pan-Britanicum."^a The English solicited the assistance of some of the Scottish Divines to join with those at Westminster, to settle an Uniformity of Religion and Church-government for the two Nations. The request was granted, and Messrs. Alexander Henderson, Robert Douglas, Samuel Rutherford, George Gillespie, and Robert Baillie, were by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland appointed in August 18th, 1643, to go to London, as Commissioners to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster.^b—Mr Douglas did not go to London, as all those who were appointed were not urged to go; but the other four went.—The writers of the Quarterly Review have very lately made a daring attempt, to consign the memory of our Presbyterian ancestors to contempt and oblivion. They have excommunicated from the pale of talent, literature, and common sense, all the Covenanters in a mass; and they endeavour to vindicate their unjust sentence, by a particular reference to two of our pious and eminently learned Commissioners, Messrs. Henderson and Gillespie. An able writer, who has completely rescued our respectable ancestors, and especially our Commissioners to the Westminster Assembly, from the foul aspersions of the Quarterly Reviewers, has made the following just remarks upon this part of their conduct. "They have not only gone wrong in their general statement, but through some strange infatuation, and as if to demonstrate their utter ignorance of fact, or their utter contempt of decency, they have ventured to mention and to defame individuals, who, though every other "brother of the covenant" had been a mere niny, deserved nothing but esteem and reverence.—Why, it would not be in the least degree more absurd to assert, that England during the Commonwealth produced no great Poets, and then to quote Milton as an example." We owe the tribute both of respect and of gratitude to the memory of those Commissioners;—of respect for their gifts, and of gratitude for their services. We proceed now to give some particular account of them.

^a Fuller's Church Hist. B. 11. p. 199.

^b Baillie's Letters, vol. i. pp. 349, 350, and 387.

ROBERT BAILLIE, D. D.

AN EMINENT PRESBYTERIAN DIVINE IN THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY, AND ONE OF THE COMMISSIONERS FROM THAT CHURCH TO THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

ROBERT BAILLIE was born in Glasgow, in the year 1599. His father, Mr Thomas Baillie, was a citizen of that place, and son to Baillie of Jerviston, who was a brother of the Family of Carphin, and a branch of the ancient Family of Lamington, all in the county of Lanerk. Baillie of Hoprig and Lamington was a branch of the Baliols, Lords of Galloway. Hoprig, by marrying the daughter of the famous Sir William Wallace, Regent of Scotland, obtained the estate of Lamington. Their second son was the first of the House of Carphin; of whom Jerviston, the predecessor of our author, according to Nisbet's Heraldry. His mother's name was Helen Gibson, of the stock of the Gibsons of Durie, several of whom were eminently distinguished by making a great figure in the Law. Our Robert Baillie received his education in the University of Glasgow, his native city, c Edinburgh Christian Instructor, vol. vii. p. 406. A very valuable Publication, which justly claims the attention of the Public.

under the care and direction of Mr Sharp, who was then the head of that College. When at the University, he was a remarkable example of great literary diligence, giving always very close attention to his studies. Having taken his degrees in the arts, he turned his thoughts to the study of divinity, to which he applied with indefatigable industry. And having, about the year 1622, received orders from Archbishop Law, he was chosen a Regent of Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. While he was in that station, he had, for some years, the care of the education of Lord Montgomery, who, at length, carried him with him to Kilwinning; to which church he was presented by the Earl of Eglinton. There he lived in the strictest friendship with that noble family, and with his people; as he did also with his ordinary, the Archbishop of Glasgow, with whom he kept up an epistolary correspondence. In the year 1633, he declined, from a principle of modesty, an offer which was made to him of a church in Edinburgh. Being requested, in 1637, by the Archbishop of Glasgow, to preach a sermon before the General Assembly, in recommendation of the Book of Common-Prayer, and the Canon of the Church, then published and established by authority, he declined the service; and wrote a handsome letter to the Archbishop, assigning the reasons of his refusal. The letter is dated at Kilwinning, Aug. 19th, 1637, and is as follows:

“ Please Your Lordship,

Your Lordship's letter of the 7th of this instant, I received the 13th, late, wherein I am desired to preach the last Wednesday of this instant, before the Assembly, and to frame my sermon to unite my hearers to the obedience and practice of the canon of our church and Service-book, published and established by authority. I am much obliged to your Lordship's estimation of my poor gifts, and do humbly thank your Lordship for intending to honour me with so great a service: but withal am sorry that my present disposition necessitates me to decline the charge.— The truth is, that as yet I have not studied the matters contained in that Book of our Canons and Common-prayer, only I have taken a slight view of them ; whereby, for the present, my mind is no ways satisfied ; yea, the little pleasure I have in these books, and the great displeasure I find the most part have, both of pastors and people wherever I come, conceived of them, have filled my mind with such a measure of grief, that I am scarcely able to preach to my own flock : but to preach in another congregation, and so famous a meeting, upon these matters, I am at this time utterly unable.”^a

This spirited refusal greatly served to establish his reputation with the party who opposed Episcopacy in the Church of Scotland, at that time. At the commencement of the Reformation, he had his own difficulties from his education and his delicacy respecting the King’s authority, in complying with some measures of the Covenanters ; but after reasoning, reading and prayer, as he himself says, he came heartily into their measures. And being eminently distinguished by his peaceable and healing temper, his uncommon prudence, and solid judgment, he was much employed in the public and important affairs of the church from the year 1637. He was chosen and appointed, in the year 1638, by his own Presbytery of Irvine, a member of the very famous and memorable Assembly at Glasgow, which was a prelude to the civil war, and of which the reader may see a particular account in Mr Henderson’s life. In that Assembly, Mr Baillie displayed great wisdom, zeal, and learning. He eminently appeared as one of the most able and zealous advocates for the Presbyterian cause. And he was peculiarly distinguished, by his strong opposition to Prelacy and Arminianism. He was also a member of all the following General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland, until the year 1653, excepting when he attended the Assembly of Divines at Westminster.

He was also one of those eminent ministers who attended the army of the Covenanters, as chaplain, in the years 1639, and 1640. He says, “ I furnished to half a dozen of good fellows, muskets and pikes, and to my boy a broad sword. I carried myself as the fashion was a sword, and a couple of Dutch pistols at my saddle; but I promise for the offence of no man, excepting a robber in the way; for it was our part alone to pray and to preach for the encouragement of our countrymen, which I did most cheerfully to the utmost of my power.—Every company had, fleeing at the captain's tent-door, a brave new colour, stamped with the Scottish arms, and this motto, For Christ's Crown and Covenant, in golden letters."^a—He adds: "Had you lent your ear in the morning, or especially at even, and heard in the tents the sound of some signing psalms, some praying, and some reading Scripture, ye would have been refreshed.—For myself, I never found my mind in better temper than it was all that time since I came from home, till my head was again homeward; for I was as a man who had taken my leave from the world, and was resolved to die in that service, without return. I found the favour of God shining upon me, and a sweet, meek, humble, yet strong and vehement spirit leading me all along; but I was no sooner on my way westward, after the conclusion of the peace, than my old security returned."^b—Mr Baillie was present during the whole treaty with the King, which commenced at Kippon, and was concluded at London. And as one of the most able and zealous advocates for the Presbyterian cause, he was, in 1640, sent by the covenanting Lords of Scotland to London, to draw up an accusation against Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury, for attempting to obtrude unwelcome innovations upon the Church of Scotland. While he was in England upon that occasion, he wrote to the Presbytery of Irvine a large and regular account of the state of public affairs, and sent them, among other things, a particular Journal of the proceedings in the trial of the Earl of Strafford.^c Not long after his return to his own country, in the year 1642, he was appointed Joint Professor of Divinity, with Mr David

^a Letters, vol. i. pp. 11, 12,

^a Letters, vol. i. pp. 174, 775, 176.

^b Vol. i. p. 178.

^c Letters, vol. i. pp. 219—297.

Dickson, in the University of Glasgow. And his reputation was become so high, that he had before this received invitations from the other three Scottish Universities, all of which he refused. He continued in his Professorship till the Restoration; but his discharge of the duties of it was interrupted, for a considerable time, by his residence in England. As a divine eminently learned, and of approved orthodoxy, he was, in the year 1643, chosen one of the Commissioners from the Church of Scotland to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. Though he did not distinguish himself by speaking much in the debates of that Assembly, he appears to have been very useful in it. He entirely concurred in the principles and views of its leading members; and gained great reputation by his writings. He wrote an account of the state of public affairs, and of the proceedings of the Assembly, while he was at London, which is very interesting. When he took his leave of the Assembly, the Prolocutor, in the name of the Assembly, gave him an honourable testimony, and thanks for his labours.^a He remained there almost all the time that the Assembly was sitting; and returned to his own country in the latter end of the year 1646. When that Assembly rose, the English Parliament made him a handsome present of silver-plate, with an inscription, intimating that it was a token of their great respect to him, and to be viewed as an acknowledgement of his good services. It was long carefully preserved in the house of Carnbrae, in the county of Lanerk, an ancient seat of the Baillies.

Mr Baillie was an eminent confidant of the Marquis of Argyle, of the Earls of Cassils, Eglinton, Lauderdale and Loudon, of Lord Balmerino, Sir Archibald Johnston, Lord Warriston, and others of the chief managers among the Covenanters. He thereby obtained the most correct knowledge of the papers and most important transactions of those times, which he very carefully collected and preserved.

He was exceedingly averse to Episcopacy, but he was not deficient in loyalty. The General Assembly of Scotland had so much confidence in his attachment to the House of Stuart, that, after the execution of King Charles I. in 1649, they appointed him one of the embassy from their body to Charles II. at the Hague, after he was proclaimed in Scotland. Upon that occasion Mr Baillie addressed the King in a loyal speech, expressing in the strongest terms his joy and that of his brethren in his succession to the throne, and their great abhorrence of the murder of his royal father. In his sentiments on this event, it appears, that the Presbyterian Divines of that period, both at home and abroad, very generally agreed.—Under Cromwell's usurpation, he joined with the party called Resolutioners, and wrote several of the papers on that side. He had a strong aversion to toleration, and availed himself of every opportunity in testifying against it. He seldom omits any opportunity of shewing his disapprobation of the doctrine of toleration, either in his Letters, or in his other writings.—After the Restoration of King Charles II. Mr Baillie, on the 23d of Jan. 1661, by the interest of the Earl of Lauderdale, with whom he was a great favourite, was made Principal of the University of Glasgow, upon the removal of Mr Patrick Gillespie, who had been patronised by Cromwell. It is said, by several writers, that Mr Baillie had the offer of a Bishopric, which he absolutely refused. This is highly probable.

^a Letters, vol. ii. p. 252.

He was very highly esteemed by some of the most eminent Biblical and classical scholars on the Continent in his time; as Spanheim, Salmasius, Rivet, Leusden, and Constantine L. Empereur. In his Letters, he writes as a man of great piety and intellect, and is found inquiring at his correspondent in Holland for the best and most recent publications on Hebrew, Syriac, and Arabic, literature, and even on mathematical science; all which shews at once the great variety and extent of his own attainments, and also his earnest desire to promote the interests of that academical institution with which he was intimately connected.—He was an excellent linguist. By his indefatigable industry, he acquired the knowledge of twelve 44. London, 1645.—A Dissuasive from the Errors of the time, especially of the Independents, 4to. pp. 252. London, 1645. A second part of the Dissuasive, 4to. pp. 179, and a long Preface, London, 1647.—A Reply to the Modest Inquirer.—Opus Historicum and Chronologicum; folio, B. 1. pp. 307. B. 2. pp. 151. with a frontispiece, printed at Amsterdam, 1668. It is written in classical and elegant Latin, and clearly proves that the author was a man of deep research and of very extensive knowledge. Letters, and Journals, in 2 vols. 8vo. vol. i. pp. 456. vol. ii. pp. 462. Edinburgh, 1775. The Journals contain a History of the General Assembly at Glasgow in 1638; an Account of the Earl of Strafford's Trial; of the General Assemblies, in 1641, and in 1643.

GEORGE GILLESPIE,

MINISTER OF EDINBURGH, AND ONE OF THE COMMISSIONERS FROM THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND TO THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

GEOURGE GILLESPIE was the son of Mr John Gillespie, who some time was minister of the Gospel at Kirkaldy, a royal burgh and market-town of Fifeshire, in Scotland. Wood says, that George Gillespie, the subject of this Memoir, was educated in the University of St Andrew's. He received a good classical education, and made very great proficiency in his studies. He was some time chaplain, in the Family of the Earl of Cassils, and waited on Lord Kennedy. He was also some time chaplain to the Viscount of Kenmure.—He was ordained minister of Wemyss, with the imposition of hands, by the Presbytery of Kirkcaldy, without the acknowledgement of the bishop. He was one of those illustrious reformers, who subscribed, as minister at Wemyss, the National Covenant which was agreed upon and sworn, in the year

1638.^a Baillie, speaking of Mr George Gillespie, calls him "a youth who waited on Lord Kennedy," and says that he "was admitted to the Kirk of Weems, maugre St Andrew's beard, by the Presbytery." Our author adds, "this same youth is now given out also, by those who should know, for the author of the English Popish Ceremonies, whereof we all do marvel; for though he had gotten the papers, and help of the chief of that side; yet the composition would seem to be far above such an age: but if that book be truly of his making, I admire the man, though I mislike much of his matter; yea, I think, he may prove among the best wits of this isle.^b Mr Baillie was a witness of the display of Mr Gillespie's abilities and learning, in the famous Assembly at Westminster. Stevenson says, that Mr Gillespie was the author of the anonymous piece above-mentioned; and that it was discharged by a proclamation, in the year 1637, as being of too corrosive a quality for the weak stomachs of the bishops.^c In it the will-worship of Episcopacy is exposed. Mr Gillespie eminently appeared, at a very seasonable time, as one of the most able and zealous advocates for the Presbyterian cause. His literature and talents were highly respectable; and diligently employed in promoting the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. He was a real friend to the work of Reformation; and strongly averse to Prelacy, to Erastianism, and to all corruption. At the venerable Assembly which convened at Glasgow, in 1638, he preached a very learned and judicious sermon, explaining these words, The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, &c. This discourse did not altogether escape censure; for the Earl of Argyll thought that Mr Gillespie touched the royal prerogative too nearly, and very gravely admonished the Assembly to let authority alone, which all took in good part; and the moderator very prudently supported what Argyll had said, in a most judicious and beautiful speech.^d

At the General Assembly which met at Edinburgh,

^a Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 292, & 326. ^b Baillie, vol. i. pp. 67, 68.

^c History, vol. ii. p. 217.

^d Stevenson, vol. ii. p. 609.

1641, Mr Gillespie had a call from the town of Aberdeen to be their minister ; but the Lord Commissioner and himself appeared in his cause, and managed it so well, that he was continued at Wemyss.^a But in 1642, the General Assembly consented unto his transportation to the city of Edinburgh.^b And he was one of those four eminent ministers, who were sent as Commissioners from the Church of Scotland, to the famous Assembly of Divines at Westminster, in the year 1643. He was but a young man when he went to that Assembly. There, however, he reasoned and conducted himself with all the skill and prudence of a veteran. Equally acute and learned, he commanded respectful attention when he spake. He even ventured to contend, with the eminently learned Selden and Lightfoot, who were at that time the great champions in the Erastian controversy, and truly formidable for their extraordinary acquaintance with Jewish antiquities and Rabinical learning.^c Against those eminent opponents, Mr Gillespie laboured with success, in proving two courts among the Jews, from Deut. xvii. 12. respecting one going up from one court to another ; that is, for appeals, as he strongly urged from hence : The man who will do presumptuously, and will not hearken unto the priest who standeth to minister there before the Lord thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die : Making the priest to hold one court, and the judge another.—And certainly to contend with such men on the field of controversy, required great store of erudition and much power of intellect. Mr Baillie, one of his colleagues in that Assembly, who had the best opportunity of being well acquainted with his abilities and learning, speaks of him as follows. “ How many and how learned debates we had, in twelve or thirteen sessions, from nine to half-two, it were long to relate. None in all the company did reason more, and more pertinently, than Mr Gillespie. That is an excellent youth ; my heart blesses God in his behalf.” And when Acts xiv. 23. was produced for a proof of the power which the apostles had of ordination, and after much debate, was going to be voiced, Baillie says; "Very learned and accute Mr Gillespie, a singular ornament of our Church, than whom not one in the whole Assembly speaks to better purpose, and with better acceptance by all the hearers, advertised, that the Greek word, of purpose by the Episcopal translators turned ordaining, was truly chusing, importing the people's suffrages in electing their officers. Hence arose a tough debate, that took up two whole sessions. Mr Henderson's overture ended the plea." And again, the same author says; "We get good help in our Assembly-debates of my Lord Wariston; but of none more than of that noble youth Mr Gillespie. I truly admire his faculty, and bless God, as for all my colleagues, so for him in that faculty with the first of the whole Assembly." And, in a letter to Mr Robert Blair, dated March 26th, 1644, the same writer says: Mr G. Gillespie, however I had a good opinion of his gifts, yet I profess he has much deceived me. Of a truth there is no man whose parts in a publick dispute, I do so admire. He has studied so accurately all the points which ever yet came to our Assembly, he has gotten so ready, so assured, so solid a way of publick debating, that though there are in the Assembly divers very excellent men, yet, in my poor judgement, there is not one who speaks more rationally, and to the point, than that brave youth has ever done; so that his absence would be prejudicial to our whole cause, and unpleasant to all here who wish it well.^a And it has been said, that once when both the Parliament and the Assembly were convened, and a long studied discourse was made in favour of Erastianism, to which none seemed readily to offer any answer, that, Mr Gillespie, being urged by his brethren, the Scottish Commissioners, repeated the substance of the whole discourse, and refuted it, to the admiration of all persons who were present. And what struck them most was, that though it was common for the members to take notes of what was spoken in the Assembly as helpful to their memory, and Mr Gillespie appeared to be so employed during the delivery of that speech to which he afterward made a reply, yet the persons who sat next him declared, that upon looking into his note-book, they found nothing of that speech written, but in different places, Lord, send light—Lord, give assistance—Lord, defend thine own cause.

^a Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 979. Baillie, vol. i. pp. 306, 307.

^b Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 1063.

^c Lightfoot's Rem. Pref. pp. 13, 17, 18.

^a Baillie, vol. i. pp. 407, 419, 431, and 451.

After his return to his own country from London, he was much employed in the public affairs of the Church of Scotland. And, having been eminently distinguished in the Assembly of Divines at Westminster for his erudition and zeal in the cause of truth, he was chosen Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which convened at Edinburgh on the 12th of July, 1648. In this Assembly, several good acts were made in approbation and favour of the covenanted work of Reformation. And, in it, Mr Gillespie was nominated one of those ministers who should prosecute the Treaty of Uniformity in Religion with the English Parliament and their Assembly of Divines.* But in a short time after this, he was seized with sickness. Mr Rutherford, in a letter to him, when on his death-bed, dated St. Andrews, Sept. 27th, 1648, says: "I dare say nothing against his dispensation; I hope to follow quickly. The heirs who are not there before you, are posting with haste after you, and none shall take your lodging over your head. Be not heavy: the life of faith is now called for; doing was never reckoned in your accounts; though Christ in and by you hath done more than by twenty, yea, an hundred gray-haired and godly pastors. Believing now is your last. Look to that word, Gal. ii. 20.—Ye must leave the wife to a more choice Husband, and the children to a better Father. If ye leave any testimony to the Lord's work and covenant, against both malignants and sectaries which I suppose may be needful, let it be under your hand, and subscribed before faithful witnesses."—Mr

* Stevenson, vol. iii. pp. 1260, 1281. Acts of General Assembly edit. 1682.

Gillespie was always firmly attached to the work of Reformation, and left a faithful testimony in favour of it, and against all the prevailing evils of that time. He died toward the end of the year 1648; some say about the 17th of Dec. He was very little past the prime of life, and his death was greatly lamented. And the Public had such sense of his real worth, that first the Committee of Estates, and then the Parliament, ordered one thousand pounds sterling to be given to his widow and children; but through the troubles of the times that was not paid.*

Of Mr Gillespie's abilities, both natural and acquired, we have the most irrefragable proofs, in the testimony of his co-temporaries, and also in the excellent writings which he has left behind him. With the original languages of the Holy Scriptures he was intimately acquainted; his knowledge of antiquity was extensive and profound; and his talent, both for written argument and extemporary debate, has been generally allowed. We are much indebted to him, for that remarkable patience and ardour of research, which have enabled him to cast very great light on the deeply interesting subject of Church-government. In all his labours, he seems to have been truly active and zealous for the Lord God of Hosts, and to have been well directed in his zeal, by the Spirit of wisdom and of holiness.

Mr Gillespie has left behind him the following learned writings. Beside The English Popish Ceremonies, obtruded upon the Church of Scotland, above-mentioned, 4to. 1637, and 1660, said to be his; we have his Assertion of the Government of the Church of Scotland, published in 1641, in which he successfully combats the Independent Scheme.—A sermon preached from Ezek. xliii. 11. to the House of Commons, at their Solemn Fast, March 27th, 1644, 4to. pp. 42. London, 1644. A sermon from Mal. iii. 2. to the House of Peers, Fast, 27th of Aug. 1645. 4to. pp. 30. London, 1645.—Aaron's Rod Blossoming; Or, The Divine Ordinance of

* Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 1285.

Church-Government Vindicated. 4to. pp. 590. London, 1646.^a In this elaborate work, the Erastian doctrine is clearly and triumphantly refuted. Mr Gillespie's Pieces on the Erastian controversy, in answer to Mr Coleman, are mentioned in Mr Coleman's Life. Male Avilis, by Mr Gillespie, 4to. pp. 56. Lond. 1646.—His Treatise of Miscellany Questions was printed at Edinburgh, 1649. 4to. pp. 281. And one of these Cases was selected, and printed again at Paisley, 1791, in a Collection.

ALEXANDER HENDERSON,

MINISTER OF EDINBURGH, AND ONE OF THE COMMISSIONERS FROM THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND TO THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES
AT WESTMINSTER.

THE memory of eminent men, who have performed services of great importance to their country, and who have filled conspicuous places with much reputation, ought to be greatly respected. In such respect is the memory of that illustrious statesman, the strenuous, yet temperate, Assertor of the liberties of his country, John Hampden, still held by his grateful countrymen, that, it is said, some years ago, one of his descendants being deficient in an account of public money, he was exonerated from the debt due to Government by an Act of Parliament, particularly expressing that it was for the services his illustrious relation had done to his country that this mark of favour was shown to him.^b Certainly less honour ought not to be paid to the memory of this eminent Reformer, who is the subject of the following Memoir, and who cheerfully performed many remarkable services of very great importance to his country, and to the church of Christ. And, both his character, and the particulars of his life, are highly interesting to us, who make a profession of adherence to Reformation-principles.

^a See Coleman's Life.

^b Anecdotes of distinguished Persons, vol. iii. 3d edit. London.

Alexander Henderson probably was born about the year 1583. But of his parents, of the place of his birth, or of the circumstances of the early part of his life, I have not been able to obtain any authentic information. Being intended for the service of the church, he was sent to the University of St. Andrew's, to complete his education, about the commencement of the 17th century. Here he was eminently distinguished by his rare abilities, and close application to his studies. And he soon became very conspicuous for his great proficiency in different branches of learning, which justly entitled him to respectful notice. And, after having finished the usual course of studies, and passed his degrees with applause, he was chosen teacher of a class of philosophy and rhetoric in the above-mentioned University.^a He was one of the professors of St. Andrew's in the year 1611; for his name is affixed to a letter of thanks to the king, on occasion of his having founded a library in the College, by the Rector, Deans of Faculty, and other masters of the University of St. Andrew's, dated 4th May 1611.^b

The Church of Scotland was in a very deplorable condition, about this time. The liberty of her Assemblies was greatly infringed; for the king claimed an absolute power over them, and arbitrarily changed both the time and place of meeting by his proclamations.^c Ministers in the Church were commonly introduced to vote as bishops in the Parliament. And some of them were craftily nominated to the titles of bishoprics on the occasion.^d The king reckoned, that equality among ministers could not agree with a monarchy; and that without bishops the three Estates in Parliament could not be firmly established; and therefore he very warmly and artfully urged the crea-

a Whitelocke's Memorials, p. 123.

b Wodrow's Mss. fol. No. 34. Advocates' Library, as with the Christian Magazine, vol. x. No. 112.

c Calderwood's Hist. Church of Scotland, page 435. Ann. 1600. p. 459. Ann. 1602. pp. 490, 491. Ann. 1605.

d Calderwood's Hist. p. 446.

tion of bishops.^a And these creatures of his basely flattered him, in his crafty designs; and he conferred upon them preferment and worldly grandeur. And thus Episcopacy, closely attended with its numerous train of evils, was keenly obtruded upon the Church of Christ in Scotland, after she had deliberately, religiously, and very solemnly, cast off this heavy and insufferable yoke. And, that the way might be the more speedily prepared, and the gates the more easily and widely opened, for the entrance of Episcopacy, with its large train of ceremonies, and external splendour, into the city of the Lord, her most able ministers, and eminently faithful watchmen, were most shamefully and unjustly silenced, imprisoned, and either banished from the king's dominions, under the pain of death, as the six imprisoned in Blackness were, or forcibly driven into obscure and remote corners of the land, where only a small number could be profited by their ministry, and where they had no opportunity of effectually opposing the corrupt measures of the king and court. That renowned servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, most powerful preacher, and zealous and courageous opponent of Episcopacy, Mr Robert Bruce, was very unfairly excluded from his ministry in Edinburgh, and left in this condition, even at the time of the king's exaltation and removal from Edinburgh to London. And, after Mr Bruce had been much harassed, and inhibited to preach he was shut up in Inverness, a town in the north of Scotland, on the 27th Aug. 1605, where he remained four years, taught every Sabbath before noon, and every Wednesday.^b And, these earnest Contenders for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints, Mr Andrew Melvil, and Mr John Davidson, were detained in confinement, at the king's removal to London, though the prison-doors were readily opened, on the way, as he proceeded in his journey, for the liberty of persons of very different description.^c And strong attempts were made to corrupt the seminaries of learning, by casting out sound teachers, and placing in their room, corrupt and time-serving men, who greatly encouraged the Court-measures. And, youth being put under the tuition of such teachers, the poison, which they industriously cast into the fountains, was very speedily disseminated through the whole land.

^a Calderwood, p. 428, &c.

^b Calderwood's Hist. pp. 470—473, 495, 496.

^c Calderwood, p. 478.

In this very dismal state of affairs, Mr Henderson, being then a young man of great abilities, eagerly desired preferment; and is said to have become a warm advocate for the new measures. Bishop Guthrie says, "This Mr Henderson had been in his youth very Episcopal, in token whereof, being a professor of philosophy in St. Andrew's, he did, at the laureation of his class, choose Archbishop Gladstones for his patron, with a very flattering dedication, for the which he had the kirk of Leuchars given him shortly after." Though the authority, it must be allowed, is not the very best, especially when Mr Henderson is brought to our view, yet there is reason to think that what the Bishop here says of him is not without foundation. Mr Henderson is said to have been very much inclined to Episcopacy in the early part of his life; and obtaining the parish of Leuchars through the patronage of Archbishop Gladstones, his settlement there was very unpopular. On the day of his ordination, such was the opposition of the people, that they firmly secured the church doors, and the ministers who attended, together with the Presentee, were obliged to break in by the window. Mr Henderson not only was known to be a defender of those corruptions to which many of the people in Scotland were exceedingly averse; but it also appears that at the entrance into his ministry, he discovered little or no regard to the spiritual interests of the flock upon whom he had been obtruded. But he had not been long minister of Leuchars, when a most happy and important change was produced on the state of his mind. This remarkable change had a great influence upon the whole of his future conduct. About that time, the celebrated Mr Robert Bruce; who had been banished from Edinburgh, had obtained liberty to return from Inverness, the place of his confinement. He improved his freedom in preaching the glorious Gospel of the Grace of God, as he had opportunity. Multitudes attended his ministry, particularly on fast-days and at communion. Mr Henderson, hearing of a communion in the neighbourhood, at which Mr Bruce was expected to assist, went secretly to the place, and took his seat in a dark corner of the church, where he would be most concealed. Mr Bruce entered the pulpit, and after a solemn pause in his usual manner, which fixed Mr Henderson's attention upon him, he read, in due time, with his accustomed emphasis and deliberation, these words as his text: Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. John x. Words most peculiarly descriptive of the character of an intruder, and so literally applicable to the manner in which Mr Henderson entered upon his ministry at Leuchars, went like drawn swords to his heart. He who carefully endeavoured to hide himself from the view of his fellow-creatures, soon found that he was under the eye of his Creator and Redeemer. He felt the powerful effects of the word of God, when the ministry of it is accompanied with the agency of the Holy Spirit. His conscience was deeply convicted, and he readily yielded to the irresistible force of divine truth. What he heard on this occasion, from that eminent servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, was by the divine blessing, the means of his conversion. And we are told, that ever after he retained a very great affection for his spiritual father, Mr Bruce, and often mentioned him with marks of the highest respect.*

a Bishop Guthrie's Memoirs, p. 24.

Mr Henderson's change of mind was soon seen in his whole deportment. He now became a diligent and faithful labourer in the Lord's vineyard. He was peculiarly zealous and active in promoting the spiritual welfare of the people of his pastoral charge. He used his utmost endeavours to remove the offence which he had given, by the manner of his first entrance among them. It may not be amiss to hear his own address to his brethren, in the famous Assembly at Glasgow, upon this interesting subject, a considerable time after this period. "There are divers among us who have had no such warrant for our entry to the ministry, as were to be wished. Alas! how many of us have rather sought the kirk, than the kirk sought us! How many have rather gotten the kirk given to them, than they have been given to the kirk for the good thereof! And yet there must be a great difference put between those who have lived many years in an unlawful office without warrant of God, and therefore must be abominable in the sight of God, and those who in some respects have entered unlawfully, and with an ill conscience, and afterward have come to see the evil of this, and to do what in them lies to repair the injury. The one is like a marriage altogether unlawful, and null in itself; the other is like a marriage in some respects unlawful and inexpedient, but that may be mended by the diligence and fidelity of the parties in doing their duty afterwards: so should it be with us who entered lately into the calling of the ministry. If there were any faults or wrong steps in our entry, (as who of us are free?) acknowledge the Lord's calling of us, if we have since got a seal from Heaven of our ministry, and let us labour with diligence and faithfulness in our office."

* a Stevenson's Hist. p. 604.

Mr Henderson now became a decided Presbyterian. He viewed the courses of the prevailing party in the Church of Scotland very differently from what he had formerly done, when he was guided by a worldly spirit, and by ambitious views. He very prudently, first fully satisfied himself by deliberate and minute inquiry, that Presbytery was more conformable to the Holy Scriptures, more favourable to the interests of practical religion, and more consistent with the liberties of the people, than that ecclesiastical system which had been lately introduced. Upon a candid and patient investigation of the existing controversy, he was firmly persuaded that Episcopacy was equally unauthorised by the word of God, and inconsistent with the reformed constitution of the Church of Scotland.^a From that period, he was very active in opposing prelatical government, and in resisting those most imprudent and despotic measures by which the Court made a bold attempt to procure a general submission to itself. And throughout the whole of the arduous conflict which he maintained, he was eminently distinguished by his ardent zeal, undaunted courage, dexterity in argument and debate, and peculiar skill in the management of the most difficult affairs. He was earnestly solicited to take an active and leading part, in the most important transactions of his time. And he always secured the confidence of his own party, and commanded the respect of his opponents. His conduct uniformly gave high satisfaction to the numerous and respectable body whose views he promoted, and they constantly turned their eye to him in cases of peculiar delicacy and moment.^b

From the time that Episcopal government had first been obtruded upon the Church of Scotland, a scheme was contrived to render her worship also conformable to the English model. After different preparatory steps, an Assembly was suddenly convened at Perth, in the year 1618. To that Assembly the King invited by his letters, above thirty noblemen and gentlemen, who were sensible that it was his Majesty's earnest desire to have the form of worship in the Church of Scotland changed, and the many and various rites of the English Church introduced among the Scotch people, that the union of the two kingdoms might be the stronger. In this ecclesiastical assembly, by the most unbecoming influence, several superstitious innovations were authorised, and the five following articles admitted, which are commonly styled the Five Articles of Perth. These were, kneeling at the sacrament of the Lord's supper; the celebration of five holy days, the nativity, passion, resurrection and ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the descent of the Holy Spirit; private baptism; the private administration of the Lord's supper; and episcopal confirmation.^a Among the faithful ministers of the Gospel, who had the courage to appear in opposition to these innovations, and to argue against them with great force of truth, we find the respectable name of Mr Alexander Henderson of Leuchars. It is very remarkable, that a proposal was made in that Assembly for the translation of Mr Henderson, and of his friend, Mr William Scot of Coupar, to Edinburgh. This proposal was seemingly made with the view of soothing the inhabitants of that city, and of procuring a more ready submission to the other acts of that Assembly. It is very probable that they had not any real design of settling those able advocates for the cause of truth and of nonconformity in that eminent station. Calderwood expressly says, that the bishops meant no such thing in earnest.^b But the proposal clearly shows, that Mr Henderson was very highly esteemed, even at that early period, by the faithful part of the Church of Scotland, with whom he was then intimately connected.

^a See the first of his Papers to the King at Newcastle.

^b The Edinburgh Christian Instructor, vol. vii. pp. 406, 407.

In the month of Aug. 1619, Mr Henderson and two other ministers were called before the Court of High Commission in St. Andrew's, charged with composing and publishing a book, entitled Perth Assembly, proving the nullity of that Assembly, and with raising a contribution to defray the expence of printing the work. They appeared, and are said to have answered for themselves with such wisdom, that the bishops could gain no advantage against them, and were obliged to dismiss them with threatenings.^c

When Mr Henderson enjoyed his beloved retirement, he spent a considerable part of his time in reading, and in those studies which were afterward highly useful to him in the public services of the church and of his country. And beside diligently discharging the pastoral duties in his own congregation, he met occasionally with his brethren at fasts and communions, when, by their sermons and conferences, they mutually encouraged each other in firmly adhering to the good old principles of the Church of Scotland; and joined in fervent prayer to Almighty God for deliverance from those evils under which they groaned. Mr Livingston mentions Mr Henderson as one of those eminently pious and able ministers with whom he became acquainted in attending such solemn occasions, between the years 1626 and 1630, the memory of whom, he says, is very precious and refreshing.^a Mr Henderson was always indefatigable in his labours. And he was inflexible in his attachment to truth and rectitude of conduct. But in spite of the superiority of his talents, and of the purity of his intentions, he was very often harassed by calumnies and misrepresentations. Bishop Guthrie represents the tumult which was produced by the first reading of the Liturgy in Edinburgh, on the 23d of July, 1637, as the result of a previous consultation in the month of April, when he says Mr Alexander Henderson came from the brethren in Fife, and Mr David Dickson from those in the west, and, in concert with Lord Balmerino and Sir Thomas Hope, engaged certain matrons to put the first affront upon the Service-book.^b But this story is at variance with the Official accounts, not only of the Town-council of Edinburgh, and of the Privy-council, but also of his Majesty, which expressly declare, that, upon the strictest inquiry, it appeared that the tumult was raised by the meaner people, without any influence, concert, or interference, of the better classes.^c Mr Henderson had no hand in any such affairs, but publicly exposed their dangerous tendency.—On March 9th, 1637, we

^a Stevenson's Hist. vol. i. p. 194.

^b Hist. Church of Scotland, p. 713.

^c Christian Magazine, vol. x. p. 221.

^a Life of Mr John Livingston, p. 12.

^b Bishop Guthrie's Memoirs, pp. 23, 24.

^c Large Declaration, pp. 23, 40. Burnet's Memoirs of D. Hamilton, p. 32.

and the eminently pious Mr Rutherford writing to him as follows: "As for your case, my reverend and dearest brother, ye are the talking of the north and south; and looked to so as if ye were all chrystal glass. Your notes and dust should soon be proclaimed, and trumpets blown at your slips; but I know that ye have laid help upon One who is mighty. Intrust not your comforts to men's airy and frothy applause, neither lay your down-castings on the tongues of sult-mockers and reproachers of godliness.—God has called you to Christ's side, and the wind is now in Christ's face in this land; and seeing ye are with Him, ye cannot expect the lee side or the sunny side of the brae: but I know that ye have resolved to take Christ upon any terms whatsoever."^a—The Archbishop of St Andrew's, with a view to deter other persons, gave a charge to Mr Henderson, and to other two ministers, to purchase each of them two copies of the Liturgy, for the use of their parishes, within fifteen days, under the pain of rebellion. Mr Henderson went to Edinburgh, and, in the month of Aug. 1637, presented a petition to the Privy-council for himself and his brethren, stating their objections, and desiring a suspension of the charge. Upon this petition, and others of a similar nature, being very Providentially presented about the same time, a favourable answer was obtained from the Council. And an account was transmitted to London respecting the people's great aversion to conformity. This step was of very great utility and importance, as it directed those persons in general who were aggrieved to a regular mode of obtaining redress. And we are informed, that the Privy-council having then testified their aversion to enforce the novations, did afterward, on different interesting occasions, befriend and promote the cause of the petitioners.^b From that time, Mr Henderson was eminently distinguished by his great activity in all the measures of the petitioners; and his prudence and diligence contributed very much to bring those measures to a comfortable conclusion. His worth was soon discovered, and he was frequently employed in the most important and delicate transactions of the times.

^a Rutherford's Letters.

^b Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. p. 190. Baillie's Letters, vol. i. Letter ii. and Christ. Mag. vol. x. p. 225.

When the National Covenant was agreed upon and sworn, in the year 1638, our illustrious Reformer was called forth to act a very conspicuous part. On the first of March, that year, the covenant was sworn with uplifted hands, and subscribed in the Grey-friars Church, Edinburgh, by thousands of the nobility, gentry, burghesses, ministers of the Gospel, and commons, assembled from almost all parts of Scotland; and copies of it being circulated throughout the kingdom, it was generally sworn with great alacrity. This memorable deed, of which it would be highly improper to forget the respectable authors, was prepared by Mr Henderson, and Archibald Johnston, afterward of Warrington, an advocate, in whom the supplicants chiefly confided; and revised by Balmerino, Loudon, and Rothes.^a Mr Henderson, with those noblemen who have been mentioned, subscribed the covenant on that solemn occasion. The inhabitants of the kingdom were now divided into Covenanters and Non-covenanters. And some of the Covenanters had submitted to the Bishops, and conformed to the Articles of Perth, who were yet accounted orthodox preachers, and zealous opposers of Popery and Arminianism, as Messrs Robert Baillie, Henry Rollock, John Bell, Andrew and Robert Ramsay, who, upon the first appearance of the Service-book, joined with their brethren against the innovations. Others of the Covenanters would not conform to the Articles of Perth, among whom were Messrs Henderson, Dickson, Rutherford, Blair, Cant, and the two Livingstons.^b—When the Marquis of Hamilton was sent by the King, to act as his high commissioner, with a view to suppress the Covenanters, who had several conferences with him without success, he at last told them that the Books of canons and liturgy should be discharged, on condition that the Covenanters would give up their covenant. This proposal exceedingly displeased all the Covenanters, and had a strong tendency to excite them unto greater vigilance and activity, in supporting and vindicating that most solemn deed. Upon this the celebrated Mr Henderson was again set to work, and the public were soon favoured with sufficient reasons why the Covenanters could not upon any terms give up their covenant, nor even pass from any part of it.—The King's commissioner afterward heard Mr Henderson preach, and conferred with him in private respecting the state of affairs, which had the desired effect of soothing the Covenanters into a belief of his affection to them.^a It seems to have been about that time, that the city of Edinburgh fixed their eyes upon Mr Henderson, for one of their ministers. Among other articles of information sent up to the Scottish Bishops, who were then at London, by their friends in Scotland, was the following : " That the Council of Edinburgh have made choice of Mr Alexander Henderson to be helper to Mr Andrew Ramsay, and intend to admit him without advice or consent of the Bishops.^b

^a Laing's Hist. Scotland, vol. i. B. ii. p. 184. Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 291, 292.

^b Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 294, 295.

In the month of July, 1638, the Tables at Edinburgh sent the Earls of Montrose and Kinghorn, and Lord Coupar, with Messrs Henderson, Dickson, and Cant, to the north country, with a view to use their influence in persuading the inhabitants to take the covenant, particularly those of Aberdeen, who, by means of their Doctors of divinity, of the university, and of the Marquis of Huntley, had hitherto declined to join with their brethren in other parts of the kingdom. Upon their arrival at Aberdeen, they were but coldly received. The Doctors presented unto them fourteen captious and ensnaring demands respecting the covenant, which they had drawn up with great care and art. Different papers passed between the Doctors and the deputed ministers of the Covenanters on this subject, which were published. Those papers of the latter are said to have been written by Mr Henderson. The deputies, being otherwise engaged, and seeing no prospect of removing the prejudices of their opponents, desisted from the controversy. And after preaching in different places, and producing solid arguments for subscribing the covenant, and taking part in the work of reformation, and procuring the subscriptions of some hundreds in Aberdeen, and in other parts, they returned to their constituents.^a

^a Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 344—352.

^b Burnet's Memoirs of D. Hamilton, p. 41.

Mr Henderson was called to make a very public appearance in the much and justly celebrated Assembly which met at Glasgow, on the 21st November 1638. The petitioners continuing indefatigably diligent, and being most firmly united, and very much animated in the defence of truth, the Court was obliged to grant their reasonable demands, by calling a General Assembly and a Parliament, that the national grievances might be duly considered and fairly redressed.

This very respectable Assembly convened in the High-church of Glasgow: and, beside a very great concourse of the people, all the nobility and gentry of any family or interest were present, either as members, assessors, or spectators. And, the multitudes assembled on this solemn occasion were so very great, that the members could scarcely obtain entrance, even by the assistance of the magistrates, with their town-guard, the noblemen, and gentlemen, and the High-commissioner himself in person, who, at first, sometimes made way for the members.^b After solemn fasting, and a very good and pertinent sermon preached from Revelation i. 12, 13.—I saw seven golden candlesticks; And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle, by Mr John Bell, who did also constitute the Assembly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the alone King and Head of his church, and moderate until another was chosen, the Assembly engaged in the choice of a Moderator.^a But, at the same time, a declination was presented from the Bishops, that is a protestation against the legality of the Assembly. And the Marquis of Hamilton, the King's Commissioner, warmly insisted that this should first be read. It was objected, that there was no Assembly without a Moderator, and therefore they ought necessarily to begin with his election. The High-commissioner seeing that he could not prevail, protested against the refusal to read the declination before the choice of a Moderator, and ordered his protestation to be entered. Before the choice, the Royal commissioner entered another protest, that this choice should neither prejudice the King's prerogative, nor any law of the kingdom, nor bar the King from taking legal exceptions, either against the person elected, or the election itself. At length, all objections against chusing a Moderator being overcome, Mr Alexander Henderson, as a minister eminently qualified to fill that exalted station in a proper manner, by his possessing great authority, much resolution, and uncommon prudence, was unanimously chosen Moderator of the Assembly, and most cheerfully called to the chair.^b His distinguished conduct, in former times, clearly proved, that he could readily act in a very difficult situation. And, in the very critical state of affairs, when discussions of the greatest importance were expected, and a very great concourse of people assembled to witness these, he certainly was a very proper person to fill the Moderator's chair. Under the special care of Divine Providence, there are, at all times, such "innumerable gradations of ability, and endless varieties of study and inclination, that no employment can be vacant for want of a man qualified to discharge it."^c This is particularly true, with reference unto the church of Christ, for which ample provision is always made. Mr Henderson, having solemnly constituted the Assembly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, afterward addressed the members in a very beautiful and appropriate speech. He soon gained the good opinion and confidence of the members, especially of such of them who were not formerly much acquainted with him; and was honoured with marks of distinguished esteem. He behaved very respectfully unto all, and at the same time with that particular firmness and independence which became the President of a free Assembly. Mr Robert Baillie, who was a member of this venerable Assembly, and who wrote an history of it, says, speaking concerning the Moderator's prayers: "Among that man's other good parts, that was one, a faculty of grave, good, and zealous prayer, according to the matter in hand; which he exercised, without fagging, (fainting) to the last day of our meeting."^a

^a Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 372—375. Baillie, vol. i. pp. 72, 73.

^b Hume's Hist. England, vol. vi. chap. liii. 1638. Baillie's Letters, vol. i. Let. x. pp. 96, 97. Stevenson's Hist. Church of Scotland, vol. ii. chap. iii. 1638.

^a Baillie and Stevenson, as above.

^b Rapin's Hist. England, vol ii. Book. 19. 1638. p. 306. See also, Baillie and Stevenson, as above.

^c Rambler, vol. iv. No. 160.

The rare abilities, which strongly marked Mr Henderson's character, were particularly brought to the touch-stone, by the Royal commissioner's premature dissolution of this great Assembly, and the excommunication of the Bishops. And, bringing his rare abilities to the touch-stone, on these remarkable occasions, was like friction to the diamond: for their excellence was then sufficiently attested; they shined with additional lustre, and they excited new admiration.

Although the King had called this Assembly, he seemingly had no design to allow them fairly to proceed in the discussion of their business. A firm determination had been entered into, of utterly abolishing episcopacy;^b which the nation now groaned under, and which many ardently wished deliverance from. But the King was evidently against the abolition of episcopacy; and so would not allow this Assembly to consider and redress grievances, but only to cause to be registered such concessions, flowing from himself, as he necessarily granted in present circumstances. And, it was very observable, that the King's commissioner did not formally consent to any part of the Assembly's procedure. It was his custom to give his voice rather by way of permission, than to say any thing that might imply his direct assent; for he seemingly resolved, to keep himself in all his words and deeds so free, that he might, when he would, disavow all that was done, or to be done, in that Assembly.^a But the members considered themselves as a free Assembly, and were firmly resolved both to claim, and to exercise, that glorious liberty, and great authority, which the Lord Jesus Christ, as the King and Head of his church, had conferred upon them. The King's commissioner had formerly urged, that prior to the trial of commissions, the declinature of the Bishops should be read. But he was told, that the Assembly was not formed or fully constituted until the commissions of elections were examined, and the commissioners who were present, known to be duly authorised. This was an affair of great importance; for as the declinature contained reasons to shew that the election of the greatest part of the commissioners was null, it was easily seen, that these reasons would come too late, after the power of the commissioners should be allowed, and they admitted as members of the Assembly. When the Royal commissioner could not obtain his desire, he entered his protest. The declinature of the Bishops was at last read, at the repeated request of the Commissioner, wherein they pretended to prove the illegality of this Assembly; and also was answered very learnedly and solidly by the Assembly. The Assembly proceeding in course to vote themselves competent judges of the libels raised against them; when the Moderator stated the question, Whether this Assembly found themselves the judges of the Bishops, notwithstanding their declinature? the Royal commissioner interposed, and declared that if they pretended to assume a right to judge the Bishops, he could not give his consent, nor continue any longer with them. Upon this, he made a speech, the substance of which may be seen in Stevenson's History, and delivered the King's concessions to the clerk to be read and registered.^a After the clerk had publicly read these concessions, the Moderator addressed the Royal commissioner in a very grave and well-digested speech, which follows :

^a Baillie's Letters, Let. x. vol i. p. 101.

^b Hume's Hist. vol. vi. chap. liii. 1639.

^a Baillie's Letters as above.

“ It well becometh us, his Majesty’s subjects convened in this honourable and reverend Assembly, with all thankfulness to receive so full a testimony of his Majesty’s goodness, and not to undervalue the smallest crumbs of comfort that fall to us of his Majesty’s liberality. With our hearts we do acknowledge before God, and with our mouths do we desire to testify to the world, how far we think ourselves obliged to our dread sovereign, wishing that the secret thoughts of our hearts, and the way wherein we have walked in time past were made manifest to him. It hath been the glory of the Reformed Churches, and we account it our glory in a special manner, to give unto kings and magistrates what belongs to their places : and, as we know the fifth command of the law to be a precept of the second table, so do we acknowledge it to be the first of that kind, and that, next unto piety toward God, we are obliged to loyalty and obedience to our king. There is nothing due to kings and princes in matters ecclesiastical, which, I trust, shall be denied by this assembly to our King ; for, beside authority and power in matters civil, to a Christian king belongeth, 1. Inspection over the affairs of the church. And he ought not only diligently to watch over ecclesiastical persons, but also over ecclesiastical matters. 2. The vindication of religion doth also belong to the King, for whom it is most proper, by his authority, to vindicate religion from contempt and all abuse, he being keeper also of the first table of the law. 3. The sanctions also are in his Majesty’s hand, to confirm, by his royal authority, the constitutions of the kirk, and give them the strength of a law. 4. His Majesty also hath the power of correction : he both may and ought to compel kirk-men in the performance of the duties which

^a Rapin’s Hist. England, vol. ii. Book 19. 1638. Stevenson’s Hist. vol ii. chap. iii.

God requires of them. 5. The coercive power also belongs to the prince, who hath power from God to restrain by his terror and authority, from what becometh not their places and callings. 6. The Christian magistrate hath power to convocate assemblies, when he finds the pressing affairs of the church calling for them; and in assemblies when they are convened, his power is great. 1. As he is a Christian, having the judgment of discretion in all matters debateable and controverted. 2. As he is king or magistrate, he must have the judgment of his eminent place and high vocation, to discern what concerns the spiritual welfare and salvation of his subjects. And, 3, as a magistrate singularly gifted with more than ordinary gifts of knowledge and authority. And we heartily acknowledge that your Grace, as his Majesty's High-commissioner, and representing his Royal person, hath an eminent place in this reverend and honourable Assembly, first, we hope as a good Christian, next, as his Majesty's High-commissioner; and thirdly, as one endued with singular gifts, and fitted in a special manner for this employment. Far be it from us to deny any thing that is due, either to those who are in supreme authority, or to such as are delegated by and subordinated to them. When Alexander the Great came to Jerusalem, he desired that his image might be set up in the temple. This the Jews did modestly refuse as inconsistent with the law, which was the law of God, but liberally offered what was in their power, and more honourable for the king, viz That they would begin in the reckoning of time from his coming to Jerusalem, and would call all their first born sons by his name. What is ours, let it be given to Cæsar, but let God, by whom kings reign, have his own place. Let Christ Jesus, the King of kings, have his own prerogative, by whose grace our king reigneth, and we pray that he may reign long and prosperously over us."

This pathetic and judicious speech does honour both to the literary abilities, and to the good sense, of the author. It accurately discriminates between the power of the church-officer, and of the civil magistrate, respecting ecclesiastical affairs; and contains an explicit declaration that the Assembly were sincerely disposed to give unto their King and his Commissioner, all that honour and obedience which corresponded with the duty which they owed to Him who was King of kings and Lord of lords. It appears to me clearly expressive of kings being nursing fathers of the church, Isa. xlix. 23. Kings shall not only join themselves to the church of Christ; but they shall also use their power and authority for the increase and defence of it."—The speech is worthy of transmission to posterity; and may be of solid and lasting benefit to them. The Royal commissioner received it with signs of pleasure, and of satisfaction; as appears by his following address to the Moderator, in way of reply: "Sir, You have spoken as becometh a good Christian, and a dutiful subject, and I am hopeful that you will conduct yourself with that deference which you owe to our Royal sovereign, all of whose commands will (I trust) be found agreeable to the commandments of God." The Moderator replied, that the Assembly being indicted by his Majesty, and consisting of such members, regularly authorised, as by the acts and practice in former times, had a right to represent the church, they considered themselves as a free Assembly; and he trusted that all things in it would be conducted conformable to the law of God and reason; that they would not advance one step but as clear light should chalk out the way before them, and that they would make it evidently appear to all men, that they were afraid to walk in another way; and that they were hopeful that their King, being such a lover of righteousness, needed only to have truth clearly pointed out before him, and, when this was done, that his Majesty would fall in love with it. Upon this, the Moderator again asked the members, If he should put the question, Whether or not the Assembly found themselves competent judges of the Bishops? But the Commissioner urged that this question should be deferred. The Moderator said, "Nay, with your Grace's permission, that cannot be; for it is fit to be put only after the declinature hath been under consideration." The Commissioner repeated, that, in this case, he behoved to withdraw. Mr Henderson replied, "I wish the contrary from the bottom of my heart, and that your Grace would continue to favour us with your presence, without obstructing the work and freedom of the Assembly."—But the Commissioner plainly declared, after some other observations had been made, that he could not continue any longer, and urging the Moderator to conclude with prayer, without effect, he did, in his Majesty's name, dissolve the Assembly, prohibiting their further procedure.^a He is said to have given these four principal reasons. 1. Lay-elders were introduced into the Assembly to vote there. 2. The ministers chosen commissioners, were elected by lay-elders, contrary to custom and practice. 3. The few commissioners chosen contrary to the instructions of the Tables, had been thrown out by mere cavils. 4. The cited Bishops were to be tried by persons who had already declared against them.^b Seemingly, the Commissioner had the King's positive orders to dissolve the Assembly, if they should attempt to try the Bishops.^c Mr Hume says, this measure was foreseen, and little regarded. The Court still continued to sit, and to finish their business.

Upon the Commissioner's departure, the Moderator delivered the following animating speech to the Assembly. "All who are present know how this Assembly was indicted, and what power we allow to our Sovereign in matters ecclesiastic: But though we have acknowledged the power of Christian kings for convening Assemblies, and their power in them, yet that must not derogate from Christ's right, for he hath given warrant to convocate Assemblies, whether magistrates consent or not. Therefore, seeing we perceive his Grace, my lord Commissioner, to be zealous of his Royal master's commands, have not we as good reason to be zealous toward our

^a Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. chap. iii.

^b Rapin's Hist. England, vol ii. Book 19. 1636.

^c Rapin as above.

Lord, and to maintain the liberties and privileges of the kingdom? You all know that the work in hand hath had many difficulties, and yet hitherto the Lord hath helped and borne us through them all; therefore it becometh us not to be discouraged at our being deprived of human authority, but rather that ought to be a powerful motive to us to double our courage in answering the end for which we are convened."^a Mr Henderson had the happy talent of suiting his expressions in his speeches to the present circumstances; and thereby greatly encouraging the Assembly amid the difficulties which they had to encounter. Having delivered this speech, he desired that if any other of the reverend or honourable members pleased, they might speak a word for the encouragement of their brethren, as God should put it in their hearts. Upon this, Messrs. David Dickson, Henry Rollock, Andrew Cant, and Andrew Ramsay, of the clergy; Loudon of the nobility, Keir of the gentry, and Mr Robert Cunningham of the boroughs, delivered beautiful and pathetic speeches to the same purpose.^b By these both the other members, and many spectators, were greatly animated with a lively sense of present duty, and of the beauty of the Truth, as it is in Jesus. They were inspired with fresh courage. And the Moderator now put the question, Whether they would adhere to the protestation against the Royal commissioner's departure, and continue constituted until they finished their business. All, except about five, did, first with up-lifted hands and afterward by a formal vote, declare their resolution to remain together until they finished the weighty business, which urgently demanded their consideration. And, under the enlivening smiles and gracious influences of approving Heaven, this renowned Assembly proceeded in their most arduous work, with much success. They clearly displayed, on every occasion, great faithfulness, constancy, and consistency. Their measures amply proved, that they were certainly directed by unerring wisdom and goodness. And their difficulties only excited them unto the performance of their duty, and awakened their holy ardour. And the effects of perseverance, courage, and zeal, were clearly seen in their conduct.^a

^a Stevenson's Hist. as above.

^b Baillie and Stevenson.

^c Christian Magazine, vol. x. No. 113. p. 265.

The last question of importance during that day was, Whether the Assembly do find themselves lawful and competent judges of the pretended Archbishops and Bishops of this kingdom, and of the complaint given in against them and their adherents, notwithstanding their declinature and protestation? Mr Stevenson says, that according to Mr Baillie, all voted affirmatively, but, according to the Journal, three or four voted in the negative.^b

A proclamation was issued against the Assembly, and published with great solemnity, at the market-cross of Glasgow. But opposition in the course of duty, rather animated, than discouraged, the members of this venerable body. "Thus may all the opposition that we meet with in the course of our duty, animate, rather than overbear, our resolution in performing it!"^c

At the opening of the next session, Mr Henderson again addressed the Assembly, and recommended gravity, quietness, and order, as in the sight of God; because they ought to have their judgments exercised concerning the matter in hand, and their minds elevated to God for light and direction. He added the following modest and beautiful remark: "Not that he assumed any thing to himself, but he was bold to direct them in that wherein he had the consent of their own minds."^d This very seasonable recommendation was punctually observed, during the whole time of the sitting of this famous Assembly.

The Earl of Argyle returned to the Assembly this session, whose presence greatly encouraged them. And the Moderator earnestly entreated him, that, though he

^a See Ferguson's Roman Republic, vol. iii. chap. xxvii. p. 400. edit. Edin. 1799.

^b See Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. p. 566. & Baillie's Letters. vol. i. p. 119.

^c Doddridge's Fam. Expos. on Luke iv. 31. Improvement.

^d Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. p. 575.

was not a member of the Assembly, yet for the common interest which he had in the church, he would be pleased to countenance their meetings, and bear testimony to the rectitude of their proceedings; which he readily promised, and faithfully performed.^a When Argyle desired an explanation of the Confession of Faith or Covenant, the Moderator said, "Although we do not compare the Confession of any reformed Church with the word of God, and are far from reckoning our Confession a rule of faith, but only a form of Confession, yet we have great reason to account honourably of it. Other churches give a large testimony thereto, and it were a shame for us not to have the same good opinion of it; and, that we may have this, it is necessary that we clearly understand the particular articles contained in the same, especially such as have been controverted. Ye all know what a great ado hath been made about this matter, some subscribing with an interpretation exclusive of the service-book and canons, and others subscribing the short Confession of Faith, with the general bond lately urged by his Majesty, without the application made by the council to the sense in which it was originally sworn:" therefore he hoped that what should be now offered would administer light that should shine to others; but, because it would require a long time to hear and peruse all the acts and books necessary for clearing the Confession, he proposed that a committee might be named for that purpose, to which the Assembly readily agreed.^b

When there was a near prospect of pronouncing sentence against some ministers who had been tried before their respective presbyteries, found guilty, and suspended, but remitted for an higher censure to the judgment of the Assembly, the Moderator delivered a grave and judicious discourse on the power of the church.^c And, at the reading of the processes against the persons, he justly observed, That they ought to be heard with a feeling sense of compassion toward the guilty persons, and also with joy that the Lord was putting forth his hand for the purging of his own house. When this respectable Assembly justly condemned six preceding corrupt Assemblies, the Moderator's observation was: "This Assembly have unanimously condemned these Assemblies, and I hope they shall be looked on as so many beacons, that we strike not again on such rocks." And he exhorted that the several judicatures should now faithfully use that power which the Lord had freely committed to them. Before sentence was given against the Bishop of Galloway, the Moderator delivered a speech to the Assembly, to conciliate their minds to the step intended. In this he said; "The preaching of false doctrine and venomous poison of that kind, to seduce the people from their profession to popery and idolatry, must have a great censure. And this man's breach of the caveats, bringing in of the service-book, which you have already condemned for the great guilt involved in it, and declining this lawful Assembly, abstracting from his personal faults, deserveth no less than excommunication.—It is known to you that the Church of Scotland have been in use to excommunicate papists and persons disobedient to the discipline of the church, from partaking of the holy communion; and seeing the Bishops are guilty in both these respects, why should not that high censure be inflicted on them? What a reverend father, Mr Andrew Melvil, said of Archbishop Adamson, That the old serpent had so stung him with avarice, and he swelled so exorbitantly with pride, as threatened the destruction of the whole body if he were not cut off, doth evidently hold of the present pretended Bishops: and therefore, it seems necessary that the last mean be essayed. And let us solicit God to make his ordinance effectual for the destruction of the flesh that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 119. Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. pp. 575, 576.

^b Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. pp. 585, 586.

^c See Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. p. 597, &c.

^a Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 600, 610.

^b Stevenson, vol. ii. p. 618, &c.

The Assembly, having finished the processes of the Bishops, agreed, at the close of their 19th Session, that the sentences which were passed against them should be publicly pronounced next day by the Moderator, in the presence of the Assembly, after a sermon preached by him suitable to the solemn occasion. He shewed great aversion to this arduous work; but all agreed that he should perform it. In vain he pleaded his fatigue, the multiplicity of affairs by which his attention was greatly perplexed, and the shortness of time for preparation; no excuse was admitted. Accordingly, at the time appointed, Mr Henderson preached before a very large auditory, from Psalm cx. 1. The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. Mr Baillie, who heard it, gives it the character of a good and learned sermon^a. After delivering the sermon, he mentioned the Assembly's appointment, named the eight Bishops to be excommunicated, and afterward caused an abstract of the evidence against the Bishops to be publicly read by the clerk of the Assembly, for the satisfaction of the people, upon which he made some observations, shewing that they justly deserved the fearful sentence of excommunication. Upon this the Assembly's sentence against the Bishops was presented and heard; after which the Moderator desired the concurrence of the congregation of God's people in this solemn action, fully and accurately shewing their warrant for it, and the necessity of it, from the word of God, particularly, from Mat xviii. 17, 18. 1 Cor. v. 1—6. 1 Tim. i. 20. He said, "Truly if the Lord had directed to another remedy for these men, the kirk of Scotland would have been glad to use it; but there is no other known mean to keep them from the condemnation of the devil, for the mortifying of their flesh, and saving of their souls, than this." After this, he most fervently and gravely called upon God by prayer: Prayer being ended, the Moderator pronounced the sentence of excommunication in these words: "Since the eight persons before-mentioned have declared themselves strangers to the communion of saints, to be without hope of life eternal, and to be slaves of sin: Therefore we the people of God assembled together for this cause, and I as their mouth, In The Name of The Eternal God, and of his Son the Lord Jesus Christ, according to the direction of this Assembly, Do Excommunicate the said eight persons from the participation of the sacraments, from the communion of the visible church, and from the prayers of the church, and so long as they continue obstinate, discharges you all, as ye would not be partakers of their vengeance, from keeping any religious fellowship with them; and thus give them over into the hands of the devil, assuring you in the name of the Lord Jesus, that except their repentance be evident, the fearful wrath and vengeance of the God of heaven shall overtake them even in this life, and after this world everlasting vengeance."^a

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. Let. x. p. 140. Stevenson, vol. ii. p. 638.

He added, "Beloved, let us not think that this fearful sentence is merely the wind of man's voice; surely these unhappy men shall find the truth of it. It is true, a farther blindness of mind, and hardness of heart, is one part of the execution of this sentence; but it may be that the Lord of heaven shall kythe some sensible judgment upon some of them, whereby they may be made spectacles of his wrath, except they repent."

At the same time, the Moderator intimated the Assembly's sentence of deposition, with reference to others.^b The whole work was very awful and solemn. Mr Baillie, who was present, says, That the Moderator pronounced the sentences "in a very dreadful and grave manner."^c And the whole Assembly must certainly be considered as "deeply affected, and filled with the mingling emotions of admiration, pity, and awe." And, Mr Henderson gave such a sample of his abilities, in this arduous work, that we may safely venture to consider him as fully equal to the task, that was imposed upon him. Whatever some may think with reference to these awful sentences of deposition and excommunication, persons of candour will undoubtedly find among the deposed and excommunicated, both characters and actions which deserved the severest censure. On the following day a petition from St Andrew's was presented to the Assembly, supplicating that Mr Alexander Henderson of Leuchars should be removed to that city. This was keenly opposed by the Commissioners from Edinburgh, who earnestly pleaded that he was already their elected minister. They also warmly urged their privilege of transporting from any part of the kingdom. Mr Henderson himself was extremely averse to remove from his present charge, to any other place; and forcibly opposed his removal in the Assembly. He pleaded that he was too old a plant to take root in another soil. It is said, He was at that time fifty three years of age.^a He also urged, that he might be more useful where he was, than in a more public station. And, if he was to be removed, his great love of retirement, which has, in all ages, closely adhered to intelligent and elevated minds, greatly inclined him to St Andrew's, rather than to Edinburgh. After a very warm contest between these two places, which continued some days, Mr Baillie says two or three, it carried by votes, much against Mr Henderson's inclination, that he should be translated to Edinburgh. Upon the Assembly's decision, he submitted, having obtained a promise that he should be allowed to remove unto a country charge, if his health should require it, or when the infirmities of old age should overtake him.^b

^a The Bishops' Doom, pp. 28—38.

^b The Bishops' Doom, pp. 40—42.

^c Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 141.

When the Assembly had finished their business, Mr Henderson addressed himself to them in a very judicious and appropriate speech of considerable length. A speech delivered on so remarkable an occasion was likely in substance to be preserved ; and may be seen in Stevenson's History.* In this able speech, he modestly apologised for his own infirmities in discharging the duties of his station ; candidly acknowledged the admirable diligence, faithfulness, and zeal, of all ranks ; reminded them gratefully to remember the wonderful goodness of Almighty God to Scotland, when the time of the promise drew near, that the isles should wait for his law, and in later times, when their adversaries were accounted the head, and they only the tail, and especially during the sitting of this famous Assembly. He reminded them of their wonderful and most glorious deliverance from the galling yoke which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear. " Now," said he, " we are freed of the service-book, which was a book of slavery indeed ; of the book of canons which tied us in spiritual bondage ; of the book of ordination, which was a yoke put on the neck of faithful ministers ; of the high-commission, which was a guard to keep us all under that slavery ; and of the civil places of church-men, which was the splendour of all these evils ; and the Lord has led captivity captive, and made lords slaves. Seeing then that the Lord has granted us liberty, what should we do less than labour to be sensible of our liberty ? We are like a man that has lain long in irons, who, after they are off, and he redeemed, feels not his liberty for a time, but the smart of them makes him apprehend that they are on him still : so it is with us ; we do not yet feel our liberty, therefore, it were good for us to keep the bounds of our liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and not to be entangled again with the yoke of bondage.—A courtier once degraded, doth scarcely ever regain his credit ; and it doth especially hold true in spiritual things. I grant the Lord can miraculously give eyes to the blind, and raise the dead, as we are witnesses this day, having ourselves been brought back to him, after we had run far on in a course of defection : but take heed of a second defection ; and rather endure the greatest extremity than be entangled again with the yoke of bondage. I grant the cross is hard to look upon ; but if we get strength from our Lord, it shall be an easy yoke. Remember the plague of Laodicea for lukewarmness, and beware of her sin ; for ye know that the Lord threatens to spue them out of his mouth.—Concerning the nobles, barons, and burgesses, who have attended here, I must say, and may say it confidently from the Lord's word, They who honour God, he will honour them.—And, I dare not dissemble, that in a special manner my heart is toward these nobles, whose hearts the Lord hath moved to be chief instruments in this work. Ye know they, like the tops of the mountains, were first discovered in this deluge, which made the little vallies hope to be delivered from it also ; and so it is come to pass. I remember to have read, that in the eastern countries, where they worship the sun, a multitude being assembled in the morning for that end, and striving who should first see their mistaken deity, a servant turned his face to the west, which all the rest accounted foolish, yet he obtained the first sight of the sun shining on the top of the western mountains. So truly he would have been thought a foolish man, who, a few years ago, would have looked for such things of our nobles as we now see ; yet our Lord Jesus hath nobilitated them ; so that contrary to their station, which is subject to manifold temptations, and the age of severals of them, which uses not to see much beauty or contentment in such affairs, they have taken part in our trials, and had a chief hand in all the conclusions which we have brought to pass, and their liberality hath abounded to many on this occasion. The Sun of Righteousness has been pleased to shine forth on these mountains, and long, long, may he shine on them, for the comfort of the hills, and refreshing of the vallies, may the blessing of God be on them and their families, and we trust it shall be seen to be so to the generations following." In this remarkable speech, Mr Henderson did not overlook the King ; and warmly recommended a favourable construction of his opposition to them. He warmly expressed his high sense of the distinguished harmony which had conspicuously appeared among the ministers, while they had been assiduously employed in correcting the many errors and gross abuses which prevailed ; and in earnestly contending for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. He concluded this elaborate and well-digested speech, with gratefully acknowledging the very hospitable treatment which the members of this respectable Assembly had kindly received from the inhabitants of the city of Glasgow ; and the particular countenance and aid afforded them by their chief magistrate. He justly subjoined, " The best recompence we can make them, is to pray for the blessing of God to them, and to give them a taste of our labours, by visiting their University, and any other thing that is in our power, without prejudice to the church of God ; that so the kingdom of our Lord Jesus may be established among them, that the name of this city may from henceforth be. Jehovah Shammah, The Lord is there." When Mr Henderson had ended his speech, he desired Mr David Dickson, Mr Andrew Ramsay, and some of the nobles, to supply what he had omitted. The two above named had discourses to the same purpose with the Moderator's speech. The Moderator judged, that the countenance given to this Assembly by the Earl of Argyle deserved respectful notice : he, therefore, mentioned him with approbation ; and earnestly wished that his Lordship had sooner joined them ; but he hoped God had reserved him for the best time, and that he would honour him here and hereafter. Upon this, Argyle delivered an extemporary speech. When Argyle had ended, the Moderator thanked him for his speech, supported it in a short discourse, and afterward concluded that very long and solemn Assembly with prayer, singing the cxxxiii Psalm, and pronouncing the apostolical blessing. Upon this, the Assembly rose in triumph. And Mr Henderson said, *We have now cast down the walls of Jericho, let him who rebuildeth them beware of the curse of Hiel the Bethelite.

^a Christian Magazine, vol. x. No. 113. p. 266.

^b Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 142. Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. p. 642.

* Stevenson's History, vol. ii. chap. iii. pp. 665—673.

a Stevenson, vol. ii. pp. 673—676.

And thus Episcopacy, the High Commission Court, the Articles of Perth, the Canons and the Liturgy, were abolished and declared unlawful: and the whole fabric, which James and Charles, in a long course of years, had been rearing with much care and policy, fell at once to the ground.^a The church of Christ now gained a glorious victory; much resembling Cæsar's victory over Pharnaces, son of Mithradates, king of Pontus, whom Cæsar, in his war with Pompey, very quickly discomfited.^b The trophies of Cæsar's victory over Pharnaces were distinguished by labels, containing the famous words, "I came, I saw, I vanquished."^c When the members of this celebrated Assembly came to Glasgow, they saw a very formidable army of lordly Bishops, and their adherents, against them with the Marquis of Hamilton, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the King himself, at their head. But by the special aid of the Lord their God, they obtained a complete victory over them all. They came, They saw, They vanquished!

Mr Henderson's elevated station, and his great activity, in this Assembly, fully exposed him to the violent resentment both of the Court and of the Bishops. And, from this, neither the strict propriety, nor the singular moderation, of his conduct, could protect him. It is said, that Dr Balcanqual, who had attended the Assembly, and agented the cause of the Bishops, seemed studiously to oppose himself to the Moderator; and on one occasion, during a debate, illiberally reminded him, that he, with others of his brethren, had once patronised those measures which he now so much reprobated. Mr Henderson prudently treated this reflection with dignified silence; and none of the members seemingly judged a reply necessary.^d In the Large Declaration, drawn up by Dr Balcanqual, and published in the King's name, Mr Henderson is called "The prime and most rigid Covenanter a Hume's Hist. England, vol. vi. chap. liii.

b Ainsworth's Lat. Dict. under Pharnaces.

c Ferguson's Roman Republic, vol. iv. chap. xxviii. The words in the original are, Veni, vidi, vici.

d Christian Magazine, vol. x. No. 118. p. 267.

in the kingdom.”^a Archbishop Laud, in a letter to the Marquis of Hamilton, says, that the only thing, in the full account sent him of the proceedings of this Assembly, which required an answer, was, “That Mr Alexander Henderson, who went all this while for a quiet and calm-spirited man, hath shewn himself a most violent and passionate man, and a Moderator without moderation.” Nor was the Primate at any loss to account for this transformation of the lamb into the lion; for he adds, “Truly, my Lord, never did I see any man of that humour, (the Presbyterian,) but he was deep-dyed in some violence or other; and it would have been a wonder to me, if Henderson had held free.”^b But one very justly observes here, “The censures of men disappointed in the mad project of subjugating a whole nation under tyranny and superstition, will be regarded as praises by all good Christians and patriots.”^c

When the members of the above-mentioned General Assembly returned home, they carefully intimated their conclusions; and thereby the knowledge of what was done was both speedily and widely circulated. And as soon as it was known at Court, that the Assembly continued to sit after they were dissolved by the Royal Commissioner, and that the people greatly approved their conduct and conclusions, the King meditated revenge, and inconsiderately resolved to raise an army to reduce them unto obedience, thinking that their actions might justify his recourse to arms. While the inhabitants of Scotland were making preparations during the winter in 1639, for defending themselves against the hostile invasion from England, Mr Henderson's able pen was much employed in several publications, in vindication of their proceedings. By order of the Deputies, he drew up a paper, entitled, “The Remonstrance of the Nobility, Barons, Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons, within the Kingdom of Scotland, vindicating them and a Large Decl. p. 237. as with the Christian Magazine.

b Burnet's Memoir of D. Hamilton, p. 109.

c Christian Magazine, as above.

their proceedings, from the crimes wherewith they are charged by the late proclamation in England, Feb. 27th 1639." This paper, after being revised and approved by the Deputies, was published and industriously circulated by their friends in England, and was very advantageous to their cause in that country. He also drew up "Instructions for defensive arms." The intention of this was, to give information and satisfaction to all among themselves, with reference unto the just and necessary defensive war into which they were forced. He did this, according to our information, somewhat against his inclination: and being hastily composed, and the subject delicate, he declined making it public by printing. But, though he would not allow it to go to the press, it was read from many pulpits, as the production of their best penman. And one Corbet, a deposed minister, who fled to Ireland, carried a copy with him, and published it with an answer, which contained little matter, but much spiteful venom, according to Mr Baillie, who flourished at that time.^a

When the magnanimous appearance of the Scots, and the indifference which the English discovered in the cause, induced the King to listen unto overtures of peace, Mr Henderson was appointed one of the Commissioners from the Scottish army, to carry on the treaty of pacification, in the month of June, 1639.^b This appointment clearly shows, that Mr Henderson was held in the highest veneration and esteem by his countrymen. He and Mr Archibald Johnstone declined going to the English camp with the rest of the Commissioners on the first day of the treaty; but, upon receiving information, that the King noticed their absence, they attended the next meeting on a following day. The King was much delighted with Mr Henderson's discourse.^c—And during the whole treaty Mr Henderson eminently displayed his rare abilities, as on other remarkable occasions.

^a Stevenson's Hist. vol. ii. chap iv. Baillie's Letters, vol. i. pp. 151, 152.

^b Bishop Guthrie's Memoirs, p. 58.

^c Baillie's Letters, vol. i. p. 180.

Bishop Burnet has observed, that it was strange to see Mr Henderson, who had most vigorously opposed the Bishops for meddling in civil affairs, made a Commissioner for this treaty, and employed in signing a paper so purely civil as that of the pacification was.^a But an attentive consideration, and close comparison of the two cases, will very clearly shew, that this reflection is groundless. The present was evidently a very critical and an extraordinary conjuncture; and in extraordinary cases, extraordinary things may be done. All that was dear to the people was at stake; and certainly all their talents should then have been called forth and employed. Beside, religion was undoubtedly the chief ground of the quarrel, and, therefore, it's interests must have been deeply concerned in the termination thereof. And the articles of the pacification proceeded upon the King's declaration, engaging that all ecclesiastical affairs should be determined by the assemblies of the church; that General Assemblies should be called once a-year; that, as the King would not own their Assembly at Glasgow, so neither should they be urged to disown it; and that a full and free Assembly should be convened at Edinburgh on the 12th of August for the settlement of matters. When these things are candidly considered, the presence of a Minister of the Gospel, who could explain difficult things, and watch over the church's rights, may be easily vindicated.^b And this reason is expressly assigned in the Act of the Committee of Parliament, empowering the Commissioners for a treaty of peace, in the year 1640. "And because many things may occur concerning the Church and her Assemblies, therefore, beside those of the Estates, we nominate and appoint, Mr Alexander Henderson and Mr Archibald Johnstone, whom we adjoin for that effect." But this is entirely different from Bishops sitting as lords of Parliament, or filling the highest offices of State, which, beside other evils, render it impossible for them to attend to the important duties of their ecclesiastical function.^a

^a Burnet's Memoirs of D. Hamilton.

^b Bishop Guthrie's Memoirs, p. 58. Christian Magazine, vol. x. No. 114. p. 306.

Mr Henderson was one of the fourteen chief persons among the Covenanters, who were required by an order from the King to go to his Court at Berwick, and meet him there, after the Scottish army was disbanded. Bishop Guthrie says, that the King's design in requiring the attendance of these fourteen Scottish Covenanters was, that he might consult with them concerning the way of his incoming, to hold the Assembly and Parliament in person.^b Bishop Burnet says, The true reason of that message was, to try what fair treatment might do with the Scots.^c But Sir James Balfour, lion king at arms, expressly says, that this was a trap laid for the chief of the Covenanters, by the advice of some corrupt counsellors; and that it was owing to a kind advertisement from some of their friends at Court, that they escaped the snare.^d An alarm having speedily spread of a design against these persons, they were stopped, by the populace, when they were setting out on their journey to Berwick, at the Water-gate of Edinburgh. Their horses were taken from them, and they were obliged to return, and ordered to stay at home: nor was it judged prudent that they should afterward proceed on their journey. This measure greatly offended the King, who, without waiting the Assembly or Parliament, set out on his return to London, the 29th of July.^e

At the opening of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which met at Edinburgh upon Monday the 12th of August, 1639, Mr Henderson, the former Moderator, preached from Acts v. 33.—Toward the conclusion of his discourse, he addressed himself in very suitable exhortations both to the Earl of Traquaire, the Royal Commissioner, and to the members of the Assembly. To the Royal Commissioner he said, "We

a Christian Magazine, vol. x. as above.

b Guthrie's Memoirs, p. 61.

c Burnet's Memoirs of D. Hamilton, p. 148.

d Stevenson, vol. iii. pp. 762, 763.

e Stevenson.

beseech your Grace to see that Cæsar have his own, but let him not have what is due to God, by whom kings reign. God hath exalted your Grace to many high places within these few years, and is doing so more especially now: be thankful, and labour to exalt Christ's throne. Some are exalted like Haman, some like Mordecai; and I pray God that these eminent parts wherewith he hath endowed you may be used aright. When the Israelites came out of Egypt, they gave all the silver and gold they had carried thence for the building of the tabernacle. In like manner, your Grace must employ all your parts and endowments for building up the church of God in this land."

He addressed the members of the Assembly in the following manner: "Right Honourable, Worshipful and Reverend, constantly go on in your zeal. True zeal does not cool, but the longer it burns the more fervent will it grow. If it shall please God, that by your means the light of the Gospel shall be continued, and that you have the honour of being instruments of a blessed Reformation, it shall be useful and comfortable to yourselves and to your posterity. But let your zeal be always tempered with an holy moderation; for zeal is a good servant, but a bad master: like a ship that hath a full sail and no rudder. We have much need of Christian prudence, for ye know what advantages some have attempted to take of us this way. For this reason, let it be seen to the world, that Presbytery, the government we contend for in the church, can consist very well with monarchy in the state, and thereby we shall gain the favour of our King, and God shall get the glory."

Mr Henderson's speeches and particular addresses, on such occasions, were of very great utility and importance unto the church. The Royal commissioner earnestly requested, at this time, that Mr Henderson, the former Moderator, should be continued in that station, out of respect to Mr Henderson's rare abilities, as he solemnly protested, but rather, as was suspected, to support the King's pretensions to the right of nominating their Moderator, and continuing him at pleasure. But the Assembly vigorously opposed this motion of the Commissioner, as too much favouring the practice of the constant moderator, which formerly had been employed for the introduction of Episcopacy : and no man discovered greater aversion to the motion than Mr Henderson himself.^a Mr David Dickson, minister at Irvine, was, by a great majority, chosen Moderator. He is represented by Bishop Guthrie, as greatly inferior to Mr Henderson, in that station. And the Bishop says, that it had been worse with Mr Dickson, "were it not that Mr Henderson sat at his elbow as his coadjutor."^b Whether this representation of Mr Dickson is just or not, it serves to show that Mr Henderson was very highly esteemed, even by the Episcopal party. Mr Dickson gave thanks, in the Assembly's name, to their last Moderator, for the quick understanding, solid judgment, and great diligence, which he had displayed in that office, to the conviction even of his enemies.^c And, when this Assembly condemned Episcopacy as unlawful, and contrary to the word of God ;^d and the Royal commissioner desired reasons of this condemnation, Mr Henderson, with the Moderator, and Mr Andrew Ramsay, shewed that Episcopacy is only an human institution, that it hath been destructive to the discipline of the church, and introductory to popery, superstition and idolatry.^e A motion was made by Mr Henderson, concerning the expedience of drawing up a Confession, positively condemning the errors and immoralities charged on, and defended, or practised, by any ministers, and clearing the doctrine of the Church of Scotland, in opposition to them, that none might afterward pretend ignorance. The Synod of Dort adopted this method with the Arminians. Mr Henderson's motion, in imitation of that Synod, was unanimously approved, and a committee named for ^a Stevenson, as above, p. 772.

^b Bishop Guthrie's Memoirs, p. 62.

^c Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 772.

^d Guthrie's Memoirs as above.

^e Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 777.

the purpose. But if they brought the matters referred to them, unto a conclusion, their report has not reached us.^a Mr Henderson preached an excellent sermon, at the opening of the Parliament, at Edinburgh, concerning the utility and importance of magistracy, from 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2, 3, on the 31st of August, 1639.^b

The Town-council of Edinburgh, who were the patrons and governors of the University of that city, having annually visited the College since the year 1614, the Rector was the more remiss in his office. The Council now resolved, that, instead of these periodical visitations of the College, they should annually chuse a Rector, whom they should direct, and ascertain the powers of his office, by articles framed for that end. Agreeably to this resolution, they chose Mr Alexander Henderson, one of the ministers of Edinburgh, Rector of the University, in the year 1640, ordaining a silver mace to be borne before him on all solemnities, and appointing certain members of the Town-council, ministers of Edinburgh, and professors in the College, his assessors. They drew up instructions, authorising him to superintend all matters respecting the College, whether connected with it's revenues, fabric, the education of youth, or the conduct of the principal, professors, and other members of the University, and their conformity to the regulations; with power to the Rector to admonish offenders, and in case of their obstinacy, to make report to the Council, and to judge and determine upon trifling disputes between the members among themselves. The custody of the matriculation-roll was also given to the Rector, and the students ordained to be matriculated in his presence, and that of the Principal, and of the Professors of the class, to which the students respectively belonged. He was also to be furnished with an inventory of the College-revenues, and donations in it's favour. The Rector continued to exercise his office, some years. But the troubles which distracted the nation, and the want of regular records of this University, at that time, render it impracticable for us to ascertain when that office was discontinued, or how the College was governed for a considerable period of time.^a

^a Stevenson, vol. iii. pp. 789, 790.

^b Stevenson, vol. iii. chap. iii. p. 807.

When the war was renewed with the Scots, and they were declared rebels, Mr Henderson was again called from his peaceful habitation. Each regiment was attended with a chaplain, one of the most eminent ministers in the bounds where they were raised, as Messrs Alexander Henderson, Robert Blair, John Livingston, Robert Baillie, Andrew Gant, George Gillespie, and others who were vested with Presbyterial authority, and were to perform every part of the ministerial function to them, proper in such circumstances.^b In the beginning of August in 1640, the several regiments arrived at Dunse, where they were reviewed by their General: and the army marched into England on the 20th of August that year, with great courage and success. Notwithstanding these warlike measures, the Covenanters still preserved the most pathetic and the most submissive language. They declared that they entered England, with no other view, than to obtain access to the King's presence, and to lay their grievances and their humble petition at his royal feet. At Newburn upon Tyne, some miles above Newcastle, they were opposed by a detachment of 4,500 men under Conway, who seemed resolute to dispute with them the passage of the river. The Scots first entreated them, with great civility, not to stop them in their march to their gracious Sovereign; but the English would not listen to them. Upon this the Scottish army attacked the English with great bravery, killed several, and chased the rest from their ground, obtaining a signal victory over them, upon the 28th of August, in the year 1640. And such a panic seized the whole English army, that the forces at Newcastle fled immediately to Durham; and not yet thinking themselves safe, they deserted that town, and retreated into Yorkshire. Their consternation on this occasion is said to have been inexpressible.^a And, in their flight, both officers and soldiers declared, that they would not fight to maintain the pride and power of the Bishops.

^a Arnot's Hist. of Edinburgh, B. iii. chap. iii.

^b Stevenson, vol. iii. chap v. p. 897. Livingston's Life, period iv.

Quicquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi. HOR. Ep. 1, 2, 14.

‘When doating Monarchs urge Unsound resolves, their Subjects feel the scourge.’ FRANCIS.

The Scots took possession of Newcastle; and though sufficiently elated with their victory, they preserved exact discipline, and persevered in their resolution of paying every thing, in order still to maintain the appearance of an amicable correspondence with England.^b Mr Henderson, the eminent subject of these pages, preached in the Great Church of Newcastle, on the Sabbath-day, to a large auditory.^c This benevolent and enlightened Reformer had an enlarged capacity of action, and of usefulness: and his labours contributed essentially to the good of the Public, on many occasions. Public usefulness to others, when the Lord requires it, ought to be preferred to retirement, and to our own special pleasures; for it is more blessed to give, than to receive.^d The nation was now universally and highly discontented. And, the great success of the Scottish army, and the very distressed condition in which the King was, obliged him to accede to proposals of peace a second time: and a treaty relative to this was agreed to, and commenced at Rippon in Yorkshire, which afterward was transferred to London.^e Mr Henderson was appointed one of the Commissioners for this treaty.^f The state of society both civil and religious requires, that some persons of distinguished abilities should be employed to consult what may be most advantagous to the body. “It is not one of the least advantages derived from the division of labour which takes place in a refined state of society,

^a Hume’s History, vol. vi. chap. liii. Stevenson, vol. iii. pp. 916, 924.

^b Hume’s History, vol. vi. chap. liii.

^c Guthrie’s Memoirs, p. 83. Baillie’s Letters, vol. i. p. 204. Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 926.

^d Henry on Matt. xxviii. 7. vol. v.

^e Hume’s History, as above.

^f Guthrie’s Memoirs, p. 87. Stevenson, vol. iii.

that there is one class of men, whose occupation is to think for the benefit of the rest ; and who, by the constant application of vigorous talents to the great object of public good, may produce effects which could never be expected from casual exertions." On this remarkable occasion, the foundation was laid of that happy conjunction between Scotland and England, both in civil and religious affairs, which was afterward most solemnly ratified by oath. The Scottish Commissioners, agreeably to instructions received from their constituents, warmly urged unity in religion, and uniformity in church-government, as a special means for the preservation of peace between the two kingdoms. At the same time, they delivered to the English Commissioners, a paper, which is said to have been drawn up by Mr Henderson, stating very forcibly the grounds and reasons of what they urged, and condescending upon measures for carrying it into effect, which paper was transmitted to the English Parliament. This paper was of great importance, and is still preserved in MS.^b And an abstract of it is given by Stevenson,^c vol. iii. p. 963. A favourable answer was given by the King and Parliament, to the above demand, intimating in general, their approbation of the affection which the Scottish subjects had expressed in their desire of having uniformity of church government in both nations ; and that, as the Parliament had already taken into consideration the reformation of church-government, so they will proceed therein in due time, as shall best conduce to the glory of God, the peace of the church, and of both kingdoms.^d This answer was ratified as one of the articles of the treaty.^d

Mr Henderson was very laborious, while he was in London, attending the above-mentioned treaty, which was continued about nine months. The Scottish Commissioners found every advantage in conducting their

a Monthly Review Enlarged, vol. xxiii. p. 291.

b The Christian Magazine, vol. x. p. 308.

c Stevenson, vol. iii. pp. 965, 966.

d Articles of the Large Treaty, p. 25. Christian Magazine, as above.

treaty; yet it was not hastily concluded. They were lodged in the city, and had an intimate correspondence with the citizens, with the magistrates, and with the popular leaders in both Houses of Parliament. They warmly recommended the Religion of Jesus, and the Reformation for which they earnestly contended; and were the happy instruments of doing much good in that great metropolis. Antholine's church was assigned them for their public worship; and here their chaplains openly worshipped God in the Presbyterian form. Multitudes of all ranks attended this church: and there was a great revival of religion in London, at this time.^a Mr Henderson now eminently distinguished himself, by employing all his influence and abilities, in promoting whatever was favourable to the amelioration of mankind, Beside taking his turn with the other eminent divines, who attended the Scottish Commissioners as chaplains, in Antholine's church, he and they were often employed in preaching for the London ministers, both on the Sabbath and on other days.^b He prepared several useful tracts for the press. At the desire of the English ministers he wrote some very good reasons for the removal of Bishops out of the church, which were printed, in 1641. And Mr Baillie, in a letter to the Presbytery of Irvine, dated, London, Feb. 28th, 1641, says: "Think not that any of us live here to be idle. Mr Henderson has ready now a short treatise much called for, of our Church-discipline. Mr Gillespie has the Grounds of Presbyterian Government Well Asserted. Mr Blair, a Pertinent Answer to Bishop Hall's Remonstrance. All these are ready for the press."^c The polishing of many important papers was committed to Mr Henderson: and he generally composed those respecting the Church.

While Mr Henderson was in London, he had a private conference with the King. The particular object of this conference was, to procure some assistance for the Scottish Universities, from the rents formerly appropriated to the Bishops. He was well received, and had ground to expect that his request would be obtained.*—

^a Hume's History of England, vol. vi. chap. liv. 1640. And Stevenson, vol. iii. pp. 941—968, 969.

^b Laing's History of Scotland, vol. i. p. 184. Stevenson, vol. i. p. 968.

^c Baillie's Letters, vol. i. pp. 236, 237, 245. See p. 233.

Mr Henderson returned to Edinburgh toward the end of July in 1641. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland had met at St Andrew's, on the 20th of July, according to the appointment of the former Assembly. But the Parliament, who were sitting in Edinburgh, sent Lord Cassils, with others, to the Assembly at St Andrew's, most earnestly entreating them to translate themselves to Edinburgh, for the convenience of those who were chosen members of both, before chusing a Moderator, or entering on any business of importance. Many most ardently desired, that Mr Henderson, who was not then returned from London, should act as Moderator of this meeting, and the members agreed that they should meet at Edinburgh on the 27th of July, and that the former Moderator should preside until that time. Mr Henderson had been elected a member of this Assembly; but, as it was uncertain that he could be present, his constituents had chosen Mr Andrew Fairful to supply his place, in case of his absence, and Mr Fairful had taken his seat at St Andrew's. Mr Fairful proposed to give his seat to Mr Henderson, upon his arrival. This was most keenly opposed by Mr Calderwood, though he was not a member, but only allowed by favour to sit in the Assembly. He warmly urged that Mr Henderson's commission could not now be received; and, in this, he was seconded by Mr Henderson himself. But, upon voting, Mr Henderson's commission was unanimously received, and sustained by the Assembly: and he was chosen to be their Moderator, under declaration, that neither that translation, without first chusing a new Moderator, nor election of one, whose place as a member was supplied before he came, should be drawn into a precedent. Mr Henderson earnestly deprecated the burden of moderating, at this time, but a Baillie, vol. i. p. 242.

It was laid upon him, by a plurality of votes. Mr Calderwood still insisted upon the great irregularity of translating the Assembly without a permanent Moderator, and of choosing one to be Moderator who had no Commission. But though he spake both peevishly and unreasonably on this subject, Mr Henderson treated him most respectfully, on this occasion, bearing all with much patience. And prior to the dissolution of this meeting, Mr Henderson publicly said, he regretted, that Mr Calderwood, who had deserved well of this Church, had been so long neglected, and readily procured a recommendation of him by the Assembly, in consequence of which he was soon afterward admitted to the church of Pencaitland.*

Mr Henderson desired that some letters should be read, which he had brought from England, addressed to the Assembly. One of these was from several Ministers in London and it's vicinity, expressing their approbation of the proceedings in Scotland, in the work of Reformation, and their expectation that the Scottish discipline would soon be established in England. And they desired advice from the Assembly with reference to the opinions of some of their brethren, who were inclined to independency, and popular government in the church. The Assembly appointed Mr Henderson to write an answer to the brethren in England; which he did with accuracy. Both letters may be seen in the printed Acts of this Assembly.

From the particular observations which Mr Henderson had made, during his late residence in London, and from the friendly intercourse which he enjoyed there, both with ministers and people, he clearly perceived that there would soon be a change in the English Church; and that there was a considerable prospect of their approaching to greater conformity with the Church of Scotland. This beautiful conformity was certainly an object of great utility and importance; and Mr Henderson most heartily concurred with his brethren in promoting it. As one of a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. Let. xxx. Stevenson, vol. iii. chap. vi.

b Baillie, as above.

the late Commissioners for the above-mentioned treaty, he eminently distinguished himself by endeavouring to advance this conformity. Agreeably to this he prudently and seasonably moved, that the Assembly should take steps for drawing up a Confession of Faith, a Catechism, a Directory for all the parts of the public worship, and a Platform of government, in which the English and the Scots probably might afterward agree. This notable motion was unanimously approved; and the burden of that labour was laid on the mover; liberty being given him, at the same time, to abstain from preaching when he should find it necessary in attending to this very interesting business, and also of calling in the aid of such of his brethren as he pleased. He declined this very arduous task, but it was left upon him.* And, probably, this early appointment greatly contributed to prepare him for giving assistance in that useful and important work, when it was afterward undertaken by the famous Assembly at Westminster.

While this Assembly were sitting, Mr Henderson petitioned for liberty to be translated from Edinburgh. He particularly urged that his voice was not sufficient for any church in the town; that he was always unhealthy there, and not so in any other place; that to keep him there was to kill him; and that, in the act for his transportation from Leuchars, there was an express clause, which allowed him the liberty that he now craved, when the public commotions were settled, if he found that he was unhealthful in that town. The Assembly were greatly perplexed by his insisting upon this petition. The inhabitants of Edinburgh were extremely averse to his removal. Beside the loss of that eminent man, they considered the transportation of any of their ministers by Assemblies, as a very dangerous precedent. And they offered to purchase an house and gardens for Mr Henderson, in an airy situation; and farther intimated for his encouragement, that he might cease from preaching a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. Let. xxx. p. 304.

b Christian Magazine, vol. x. p. 310.

when he judged this necessary; and use his freedom in going to the country, at any time, when the state of his health required. They were the more averse to his removal, as a petition had been presented to the Assembly for his transportation to St Andrew's, to be Principal of the University there. He continued to insist for his liberty. Some reckoned that his great earnestness for a removal from Edinburgh arose from his displeasure at the keen speeches of some of the inhabitants against him, on account of his opposition to their humour for innovations; but he affirmed that his health was the sole ground of his petition; that if his health did not fail, he would continue at Edinburgh, even though liberty was now given him to remove; and that, if he did remove, he would not go to St Andrew's, but to some quiet country-charge. His earnest petition was at last granted, which much grieved many of the inhabitants of Edinburgh: but he either did not find his removal afterward necessary, or he was prevailed upon not to use that liberty which with much difficulty he now obtained.^a

The King revisited Scotland, that he might be present in person at the Parliament, in his native kingdom, leaving both Houses of the English Parliament sitting at Westminster, in the month of August, 1641.^b He was obliged now to cultivate the attachment of the Scottish nation for the support of his throne. He attended public worship, on the Sabbath-day, after his arrival at Edinburgh, and heard Mr Henderson preach, the forenoon, in the Abbey-Church, from Romans xi. 36. It is said, that he did not attend in the afternoon; but Mr Henderson having conversed with him relative to this, he afterward punctually attended the public worship. Mr Henderson waited on the King as his chaplain, and was appointed to provide preachers for his Majesty during the time that he was in Scotland, he having declared, that he would conform to their mode of worship while he was among them. And he attended regularly family-worship in the palace, morning and evening, as performed by his chaplain, in the Scottish form. And he exhibited no symptom of dissatisfaction with the want of a Murgy and the ceremonies. His whole deportment at this time, afforded some hope to his Scottish subjects, who were not thoroughly acquainted with his character, that he would not oppose, but encourage the work of Reformation. On the last day of the meeting of this Parliament, when great solemnity was observed, the King seated on his throne, and the Estates in their places, Mr Henderson began with prayer; and when the business was finished, he closed the meeting with a sermon. The revenues of the Bishoprics were divided at this time: and Mr Henderson now eminently exerted himself in favour of the Scottish Universities. And what belonged to the Bishopric of Edinburgh, and Priory, was, by his influence, though not without difficulty, procured for the University of that city. The emoluments of the Chapel-royal, amounting to about 4 00 merks yearly, were conferred upon Mr Henderson, as a recompense for his laborious and expensive services in the cause of the public. The King was, in general, very accommodating and favourable to the Scottish nation, in this visit, wishing to obtain their concurrence against the English Parliament. Argyle was created a Marquis; and the Lords Loudon and Lindsay, were raised to the dignity of Earls. And all parties were so well pleased, that when the King returned to England, it was said, "That he departed a contented King from a contented People." But duplicity strongly marked the King's character, and the Scots were afraid to depend upon him, and, therefore, were obliged to join the English Parliament, and assist them in recovering their liberties and religion.

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. pp. 314, 315.

^b Clarendon, vol. i. B. iii. p. 279.

Mr Henderson was much employed in managing the correspondence with England respecting reformation, and religious uniformity during the year 1642. The English Parliament having agreed to abolish Episcopacy, a Stevenson, vol. iii.—Acts of Assembly, edit. 1682. p. 122.

Neal's Hist. Purit. vol. ii, chap. ix.

requested that some ministers should be sent from the Church of Scotland to assist in the Synod which they had resolved to convene. The Commission of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, being fully authorised by them, met, and nominated Commissioners, who were appointed that they might be ready to go to England as soon as it should be necessary. Mr Henderson was one of those, who came under this appointment, by the Committee. He was very averse to the appointment, protesting that in his former journey, he thought that he should have died before he arrived at London. But he could not be excused, and at last acquiesced, complaining, that several persons were very forward in imposing heavy burdens upon him, and afterward employed themselves in inventing or receiving calumnies, or reports, which were injurious to his character.—This journey was hindered for some time, by the confusions which attended the civil war.^a Mr Henderson earnestly wished a reconciliation of the parties, upon honourable terms. Bishop Burnet says, That he joined with a number of leading men in an invitation to the Queen to come to Scotland, upon terms consistent with her safety and honour, with a view of promoting a mediation; but the King rejected this proposition.^b Mr Henderson afterward went in person to the King at Oxford, with the Commissioners from the State, who were sent to offer the mediation of the Scottish nation. But their aid was more desired than their intercession. Accordingly, their mission was unwelcome, and their reception unfavourable. Their powers were questioned, to interpose in the internal dissensions of England, as conservators of peace between the two kingdoms: and their importunate demand of religious uniformity did not relish. They were reviled and threatened by the royalists and recalled in disgust. At the first interview, the King endeavoured to convince Mr Henderson of the justice and necessity of his arms; but when he found that Mr Henderson was not so credulous as he expected, his behaviour toward him was entirely different, and frowns appeared in his countenance. Mr Henderson presented to the King, an humble Petition from the Commissioners of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, dated Jan. 4th 1643. And it is said, that Mr Henderson was the author of the Petition, which is very probable.^a It contains a complaint of the insolence of Papists, and of others disaffected to the Reformation of Religion, supplicating the King to apply his royal authority, for disbanding their forces, and preventing their bloody projects;—for religious uniformity, an Assembly of Divines, the removal of the great mountain of Prelacy, and for promoting the glorious work of Reformation. The Petition may be seen in its original state, as given in by Mr Henderson, in Clarendon's History :^b and also the King's answer to it, which was not favourable. While Mr Henderson remained at Oxford, some of the Doctors wished to engage him in controversy, respecting Church-government, but, judging that it was unbecoming his character, as a Representative of the Church of Scotland, to dispute with private individuals, and viewing them as disposed to cavil rather than to give or to receive information, he signified that his business was with the King. It is said, that a Popish Dr Taylor challenged Mr Henderson to a public dispute at Oxford; so insolent were Papists become through the Royal favour.^c Clarendon is greatly offended at the distance, or, as he calls it, the great insolence, which Mr Henderson discovered at this time.^d But upon his return to Edinburgh, he gave a full account of his proceedings with the King to the Commissioners of the Church, who expressed their entire satisfaction with his whole conduct, and their judgement was fully approved by the next Assembly, who readily pronounced his carriage to have been "faithful and wise."^e

^a Baillie's Letters, vol. i. pp. 349, 350.

^b Memoirs of D. Hamilton, p. 201.

^a Baillie, vol. i. pp. 358, 359.

^b Book vi. vol. iii. pp. 175—180. 8vo. vol. ii. fol. p. 134, &c.

^c Christian Magazine, vol. x. p. 313.

^d Clarendon's Hist. vol. iii. p. 180. B. vi.

^e Baillie, vol. i. p. 359. Christ. Mag. as above.

The Scots were greatly dissatisfied with the uncivil treatment which their Commissioners had received at Oxford, and being now fully convinced that the measures of the Royal party were highly dangerous to both countries, they soon afterward entered into a very close alliance with the English Parliament. Upon this, Mr Henderson was sent to London, where he spent the greater part of his remaining days on the earth.

The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which convened at Edinburgh, on the 2d of Aug. in the year 1643, was particularly distinguished by the presence of Commissioners from the English Parliament, and the formation of the famous Solemn League and Covenant. Keeping in view the deeply interesting business of that Assembly, their attention was again turned to Mr Henderson as Moderator, and he was the third time unanimously called to the chair. Mr Baillie says, "Our greatest consultation was for the Moderator. We foresaw great business was to be in hand; strangers were to be present; and the minds of many brethren were exasperated. Mr Henderson was the only man meet for the time."^a Every thing was decently and properly conducted, in the presence of the English Commissioners; Sir William Armyn, Sir Henry Vane, younger, Mr Hatcher, and Mr Darley, with two Ministers of the Gospel, Mr Stephen Marshall, and Mr Philip Nye. After an appropriate introduction, said to have been drawn by Mr Marshall, and Sir Henry Vane, these delegates presented their commission from both Houses of the English Parliament, giving very ample power to the Earl of Rutland, Lord Grey, and these four above-mentioned, to treat with the Scottish Covenanters, and to the two Ministers, to assist in ecclesiastical affairs, according to their instructions given or to be given, or to any four of them. They also presented a declaration of both Houses to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, shewing their care of reforming religion, and their desire that some of the Scottish Di-vines should join with their Assembly of Divines for that end.^a The Royalists were a furious and vindictive party, and very hostile to the liberties and religion of the nation. And when the royal arms were triumphant, the English Parliament implored the fraternal aid of the Scots, earnestly soliciting their immediate help. And with a view to unite the nations in a very close alliance in mutual reformation and defence, a Covenant was proposed. The English at first were for a civil League, and the Scots for a religious Covenant. Mr Henderson gave them a draught of a Covenant which he had composed. This at length obtained the assent of the three Committees, of the English Parliament, of the Convention of Estates, and of the General Assembly. Being adopted by them, it was immediately transmitted to the General Assembly and Convention. And being introduced into the Assembly by a very grave and appropriate speech from the Moderator, it was received with the highest applause, and adopted with tears of much joy. It was read distinctly the second time, by the Moderator. And, upon both ministers and ruling elders, in general, being asked, and having freely delivered their sentiments respecting it, the catalogue was read, and all readily and unanimously assented. On the afternoon, it passed the Convention of Estates, with the same cordial approbation, and it was appointed to be transmitted to the English Parliament for their approbation. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland renewed the appointment of their Commission respecting the members who were to be sent from them to assist the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster: and Mr Henderson was appointed to set out immediately for London, with a view to obtain the ratification of the Solemn League and Covenant.

^a Baillie, vol. i. p. 374.

On the 30th of August, Mr Henderson sailed from Leith for London, in company with other Commissioners.^b The Covenant having been approved by both Houses of the English Parliament, and by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, the members of the latter, with those of the House of Commons, convened in Margaret's Church, Westminster, upon the 25th of September; and having first solemnly sworn, afterward subscribed it. Immediately before they proceeded in that most important work, Mr Henderson delivered a very appropriate and encouraging speech to them, in which he very judiciously and warmly recommended the duty, as acceptable to God, and well pleasing in his sight—exemplified by the people of God, and by other reformed churches and kingdoms, both in former and later times,—as very necessary—and crowned with the most surprising success. The reader will find the speech at the conclusion of this work.

^a Baillie, vol. i. p. 380.

^b Baillie, vol. i. pp. 380—390.

Mr Henderson acted a very conspicuous part in assisting the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, as a Commissioner from the Church of Scotland. His deportment was very grave, and highly becoming the dignity of his station; and great deference was paid to his opinions. He always discovered uprightness in his designs, and was indefatigable in the application of his talents. He honourably maintained a sway over men, who, in point of acuteness and erudition, have seldom been equalled. And when it became necessary to vindicate the principles of the Church of Scotland, and of the other Reformed Churches, from slanderous charges, he spoke with great facility, and most judiciously. His wisdom was seen in speaking with great propriety on the various subjects which were discussed. And his rare abilities were peculiarly displayed in reconciling contending interests, and in preserving harmony among the members of the Assembly, in the prosecution of that cause, which they had all solemnly sworn to promote. Several very striking instances of this kind occur in the History of the proceedings of that truly Venerable Assembly.^a But he always most strenuously resisted every attempt which was made, with a view to introduce any principles which were opposite to those of the Church of Scotland, and of other Reformed and Presbyterian Churches. Accordingly, he stated himself equally in opposition to the schemes of the Independents, and of a strong party in the House of Commons, who had imbibed Erastian principles, denying the Divine right of Church-government, and wishing to subject the proceedings of Church judicatories to the controul and review of the Parliament.^a—In the debates of the Assembly, there was often much heat. This was partly owing to their divesting their Prolocutor, or Moderator, of all power, as the House of Commons did their Speaker, and converting him into a mere chair, using the language of one who was a witness of their proceedings. Mr Henderson greatly lamented this evil, and on a fast-day, after the religious exercises were ended, he embraced the opportunity of bringing the members to a free and brotherly conference on the subject, in which having seen their fault, they resolved to guard against such excesses in time to come.^b In the beginning of the year 1645, Mr Henderson was appointed to assist the Commissioners of the two Parliaments, in the treaty between them and the King, at Uxbridge. The Parliamentary Commissioners were instructed to demand the abolition of Episcopacy, and the ratification of the Presbyterian government. The King's Commissioners objected to the abolition of Episcopacy, upon which it was agreed to hear the Divines on both sides. Mr Henderson, in an elaborate speech, which Clarendon allows was not without eloquence, opened the cause, and took up that ground which offered fairest for bringing the controversy to a speedy conclusion. Waving the dispute respecting the lawfulness of Episcopacy, he said, "That the question was not, "Whether the government of the Church by Bishops was lawful, but whether it was so necessary that Christianity could not subsist without it?" He argued that it was not; and that the question could not be answered in the affirmative, without condemning all other

^a See Baillie's Letters, vol. i. pp. 401, 420.

^a Baillie, vol. ii. pp. 31, 68, 183, 194, 195.

^b Christ. Mag. vol. x. p. 352.

Reformed Churches.—That the English Parliament had found Episcopacy a very inconvenient and corrupt government.—That the Hierarchy had been a public grievance from the Reformation downward.—That the Bishops had always encouraged Popery, and retained many superstitious rites and customs in their worship and government; and had lately brought in many innovations, and made a nearer approach to the Roman Communion, to the great scandal of the Protestant Churches of Germany, France, Scotland, and Holland.—That the Prelates had embroiled the British Island, and kindled the flame which raged through the three kingdoms.—That for these reasons the Parliament had resolved to change this inconvenient and mischievous government, and to set up another in it's room, more naturally formed for the advancement of piety.—And that this alteration was the best expedient to unite all Protestant Churches, and to extinguish the remains of Popery: nor could he conceive that His Majesty's conscience could be urged against this salutary change, seeing that he had agreed to the suppression of Prelacy in Scotland.

But the advocates for Episcopacy were fully determined not to hazard their cause upon such grounds as were plain to all, but endeavoured to involve the question, by introducing the dispute at large respecting Episcopal government. Dr Stewart, who was Commissioner for the King in religious affairs, enlarged upon the apostolical institution of Episcopacy, and endeavoured to prove, that without Bishops the sacerdotal character could not be conveyed, nor the sacraments administered to any significance. Dr Stewart said, that the debate was too general, and desired that they should dispute syllogistically, as became scholars, to which Mr Henderson readily agreed. The dispute continued a considerable time; and though each party claimed the victory, as is common, yet, it was said by some auditors, who must be allowed not to have been prejudiced in favour of Presbytery, that while Mr Henderson equalled the King's

Commissioners in learning, he surpassed them in modesty.^a

The treaty was broken off without success, and Mr Henderson returned to London, and continued to assist the Assembly of Divines in their arduous work. This year, his health began visibly to decline. He suffered repeated attacks of the gravel, and other diseases which of course follow upon confinement and hard study.^b

Toward the end of the year 1645, it was judged necessary that Mr Henderson, with some other persons, should go to Scotland, with a view to procure a better correspondence among the nobility and others; but he was detained by the weather, want of health, important business, and the importunity of friends in London.^c

The King's affairs, which had been some time on the decline, were entirely ruined, in the spring of 1646. Upon this, he cast himself into the Scottish army, who retired with him to Newcastle. When he arrived there, he sent for Mr Henderson, who was his Chaplain, to come to him. The only measure which then promised a settlement to the nation, and the King's restoration to the actual exercise of his authority, was his taking the Covenant, and speedily consenting to the establishment of the Presbyterian Reformation in both kingdoms. Mr Henderson was judged the best qualified person to deal with the King respecting a compliance, and the removal of any difficulties with which his mind might be embarrassed. And notwithstanding his unfitness for the journey, he complied with the King's request, enforced by the advice and entreaties of his fellow-commissioners; clearly shewing his public spirit for the advancement of the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, and for the good of his country. He arrived at Newcastle about the middle of the month of May. He received a kind welcome from his Majesty, but he soon perceived that he would not comply with the requisitions of his Parliaments. The

^a Neal's Puritans, 1645. Whitelocke, pp. 123, 127. Clarendon, B. viii. Collier, vol. ii. p. 837.

^b Baillie, vol. ii. p. 109. B. viii. ^c Baillie, vol. ii. pp. 170, 171.

King signified that he could not in conscience consent to the abolition of Episcopacy; and proposed that Mr Henderson should carry on a dispute with some Episcopal Divines, of whose names he gave him a list, in his presence. This Mr Henderson declined, as what he had no authority to undertake, and no reason to expect, when he complied with his Majesty's request in coming to Newcastle. Mr Henderson also added, "that such disputations had seldom any good effect, in ending controversies, and that, in the present instance; such a mode would be exceedingly prejudicial to his Majesty's affairs. All that I intended was a free, yet modest expression of my motives, and inducements, which drew my mind to the dislike of Episcopal government, wherein I was bred in the University." It was, therefore, agreed, that the King's scruples, should be discussed in a series of papers, which should pass privately between him and Mr Henderson. The papers are eight in number, five by his Majesty, and three by Mr Henderson; continued from some time in May, until the 16th of July. On that occasion, Mr Henderson gave the infatuated Monarch a very good advice, to leave off exciting learned men to dispute respecting the power or prerogative of Kings and Princes by which he had lost very much. The neglect of that advice cost him both his crown and his life. Perceiving that he obstinately adhered to opinions which were disowned by all the moderate Episcopals, and maintained by those only who had acted as base incendiaries between the King and his Parliaments, Mr Henderson declined entering farther into a fruitless contest.

During the conference with the King, Mr Henderson's health, which was considerably impaired when he came to Newcastle, grew much worse. His constitution was now worn out with great labour and travel. His colleagues at London, greatly alarmed with the accounts which they received respecting him, wrote to him, earnestly entreating that he would be careful of himself, and not allow vexation on account of the King's obduracy to prey upon his spirits, and increase his disorder. Mr

Baillie, in a letter addressed to him, under the date of May 16, 1646, says, "If that man now go to tinkle on Bishops, and Delinquents, and such foolish toys, it seems he is mad. If he have the least grace and wisdom, he may, by God's mercy, presently end the miseries, wherein himself, and many more, are likely else to sink. Let me entreat you for one thing, when you have done your uttermost, if God is pleased to deny the success, not to vex yourself more than is meet. When we hear of your health and courage, it will refresh us." In another letter, dated Aug. 4, Mr Baillie writes to him as follows: "Your sickness has much grieved my heart. It is a part of my prayers to God, to restore you to health, and continue your service at this so necessary a time. We never had so much need of you as now. The King's madness has confounded us all. We know well the weight that lies on your heart." And in another letter, dated Aug. 13, 1646, he says: "Your weakness is much regretted here by many. To me it is one of the sad presages of the evils coming. If it be the Lord's will, it is my hearty prayer oft-times, that you might be lent to us yet for some time."

Mr Henderson, having now concluded that his disease was mortal, resolved to return to Scotland. But before he left Newcastle, he obtained an audience from the King, and having again reminded him of the very critical situation of his affairs, he took a final farewell of him, having faithfully discharged the duties of his commission, and of that employment which placed him about his Majesty's person, in the fulfilling of which he had enjoyed very little satisfaction. In dealing with the King, Mr Henderson only failed where he evidently could not succeed. He went to his native country by sea, and arrived at Edinburgh on the 11th of Aug. 1646, very sick and much exhausted. He continued so weak, that he was not able to speak much. But he enjoyed great peace of mind, and expressed himself, in what he was able to say, very much to the comfort of his brethren and Christian acquaintance who visited him. In a short confession of faith, which was afterward found among his papers, and written with his own hand, expressing, at the trying hour, his dying thoughts, among other mercies, he declares himself "most of all obliged to the grace and goodness of God, for calling him to believe the promises of the Gospel, and for exalting him to be a preacher of these to others, and to be a willing, though weak instrument, in this great and wonderful work of Reformation, which he earnestly beseecheth the Lord to bring to a happy conclusion." He rested from his labours, sickness, and sorrow, on the 19th of Aug. 1646. He died within eight days after his arrival in Scotland.^a Mr Livingston, in his Characteristics, at the end of his Life, declares that he was present, and saw Mr Henderson die with great peace and comfort. Baillie says, "That he died as he lived, in great modesty, piety, and faith."^b

His mortal remains were interred in Grayfriar's churchyard, Edinburgh. As he had no family of his own, his nephew, Mr George Henderson, performed the last kind office of humanity to his earthly part, and erected a monument over his grave with appropriate inscriptions, which testify that Mr Henderson was very highly esteemed by all classes. His life was much desired, and his death greatly lamented, both in Scotland and England. A London newspaper, Perfect Diurnal, No. 162, under the date of Aug. 31, 1646, says, "This day—the only news was by letters from the North, and first of all a sad lamentation for the death of Mr Henderson." After the Restoration, when all indignity was done to the work of Reformation, and to those persons who had been most active in promoting it, the Earl of Middleton, the King's Commissioner, procured an order of Parliament in July 1662, for erasing the inscriptions, and disfiguring his monument.^c But at the Revolution, the monument was repaired, and the inscriptions replaced. It still stands entire on the south-west side of the Greyfriar's church. It is a quadrangular pillar, with an urn at the top.

^a Christ. Mag. vol. x. p. 394. Acts of Ass. ed. 1682. p. 421.

^b Baillie's Letters, vol. ii. p. 232.

^c Woodrow's Hist. vol. i. p. 152. Ludlow's Detect. of Holingworth's Forgeries.

Mr Henderson having died soon after his conferences with the King at Newcastle, the Episcopalians industriously circulated the report, that he was not only vanquished, but also converted by his Royal antagonist. But this report had not the least shadow of foundation, and was very keenly contradicted by the concurring testimony of all who had access to be well acquainted with Mr Henderson's sentiments during that time. But this was not enough, for about two years after his death, a Declaration in Mr Henderson's name, the forgery of a Scots Episcopal Divine, was published, in which he was represented as expressing great contrition for acceding to the proceedings of the Presbyterians. Upon the appearance of that base pamphlet, the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland called and examined several persons, who were present with Mr Henderson during the conferences at Newcastle, and also during the time which elapsed from his return to Edinburgh till his death, who declared that he had continued to the last constant and unaltered in his sentiments; upon which the Assembly passed an act, declaring "the said pamphlet forged, scandalous, and false, and the author and contriver of the same void of charity and a good conscience, and a gross liar and calumniator, led by the spirit of the accuser of the brethren."^a About the middle of the 18th century, this convicted forgery was credulously revived by Mr Ruddiman, who, notwithstanding his eminent learning, is well known to have had the weakest prejudices on the subject of Jacobitism and Episcopacy. This was triumphantly exposed by Mr Logan.^b

When Mr Henderson had finished his academical studies at St Andrew's, he was chosen Professor of philosophy and rhetoric in that University. His talents and acquirements sufficiently recommended him to the office. Upon the change of his mind, he became a faithful Minister of the Gospel, and a decided Presbyterian. Educated in Episcopal sentiments, and having the fairest prospects of preferment in a rising hierarchy, he readily sacrificed his high expectations to the word of God, and to the deep convictions of his own conscience. He cheerfully espoused a cause, which, though honourable in the sight of God, was much despised and borne down by men who were high in place. He strongly resisted ecclesiastical oppression, and earnestly contended for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. He was very highly esteemed by all ranks of the people, who were attached to the cause of Truth, and had much influence with both the Nobility and Clergy, even with the greatest and wisest men of the kingdom. He was called from his delightful retirement to the assistance of his dear countrymen, who groaned under the oppression of ambitious prelates, who were greatly supported by an arbitrary Court and corrupt Statesmen. "Though he sighed after his original solitude, and suffered from the fatigues and anxiety to which he was subjected, yet he did not relinquish his station, nor shrink from the difficult tasks imposed upon him, until his feeble and shattered constitution sunk under them, and he fell a martyr to the cause."^a—Clarendon, with all his prejudices against Mr Henderson, cannot deny that he was eloquent though he is pleased to say, that he had more eloquence or rhetoric than logic.^b Bishop Guthrie, in his Memoirs, p. 24, says; "Upon Mr Henderson all the ministry of that judgment depended; and no wonder, for in gravity, learning, wisdom, and state-policy, he far exceeded any of them." Pinkerton, in his Iconographia Scotica, calls him, "the Franklin of the Scottish commoners." And Grainger, a clergyman of the Church of England, gives the following character of him: "Mr Henderson, the chief of the Scottish Clergy in this reign, was learned, eloquent, polite, and perfectly versed in the knowledge of mankind. He was at the helm of affairs in the General Assemblies in Scotland, and was sent into England in the double capacity of a divine and plenipotentiary. He knew how to rouse the people to war, and to negotiate a peace. Whenever he preached, it was to a crowded audience, and when he pleaded or argued, he was regarded with mute attention." And a very late writer, of great respectability, says: "Mr Henderson had talents and acquirements which fitted him for rising to eminence; that eminence he actually attained and preserved; and nothing but shameful ignorance or ruthless bigotry will deny him the praise of having been both a great and a good man." It is certain, that he held a very conspicuous place, among our worthy Reformers, and was well known and highly respected for his judicious, faithful, and important services, in the cause of Christianity, which render the particulars of his Life deeply interesting to us. And to give such a name a distinguished place in the rolls of Biography, is a debt of gratitude which the public are bound to pay, in return for benefits received.

^a Acts of Assembly, p. 420, &c. edit. 1682.

^b See Logan's second Letter to Ruddiman, 1799.

^a Christian Magazine, vol. x. p. 398.

^b Clarendon's History, B. viii.

Mr Henderson having been much employed in public affairs, had little time to prepare works for the press. But the few sermons of his which were published, although hastily composed amid much business and many avocations, afford very favourable specimens of his talents, and clearly shew that in pulpit oratory he was inferior to none of his contemporaries. His compositions are distinguished by accurate thinking, appropriate illustration, and elegant simplicity of language,—and bear marks of a vigorous and well cultivated mind. These probably will be perused with great avidity by some persons at this present time, and may become an important record to posterity. Beside the pieces mentioned in his Life, I have seen the following sermons under his name, which are still extant.

1. A Sermon preached from Ezra vii. 23. to the Hona Grainger's Biog. Hist. vol. i. p. 416, first edition.

b Edinburgh Christian Instructor, vol. vii. p. 408. 1813.

ourable House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, Wednesday, Dec. 27th, 1643. 4to. pp. 36. London, 1644. Mr Baillie calls it "A most gracious, wise, and learned Sermon."—2. A Sermon preached from Mat. xiv 31. before the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, in Margaret's Church, Westminster, 10th of July, 1644. Thanksgiving, 4to. pp. 24. London, 1644. and reprinted at Edinburgh in 1644 with a large Address prefixed to the Kirk and Kingdom of Scotland, his native country.—3. A Sermon preached from John xviii. 36, 37. before the House of Lords, in the Abbey Church, Westminster, solemn Fast, 28th of May, 1645. 4to. pp. 31 London, 1645.. His Speech at taking the Covenant was printed both at London, and Edinburgh, in 1643 and several times afterward, with the Sermons at taking the Covenant.

SAMUEL RUTHERFORD,

PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREW'S, AND ONE OF THE COMMISSIONERS FROM THE CHURCH OF SCOT-LAND TO THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

SAMUEL RUTHERFORD is said to have been born of respectable parents, in the parish of Tongueland, near Kirkcudbright, in the south of Scotland. And it has also been said, that when he was a little boy, he narrowly escaped drowning in a well, from which he was delivered in a very remarkable manner; and that, this wonderful deliverance induced his father to dedicate him unto the service of his Lord and Saviour, expecting that he might probably become an eminent man. I have the account of these things only by tradition; but upon strict inquiry the authority seemed to be good, and therefore I have ventured to mention such circumstances, in the life of this learned and pious divine, wishing to be corrected, if the account is found not true. Be these particulars as they may, Mr Rutherford had a brother who was the Schoolmaster of Kirkcudbright, and being a non-conformist, he was summoned before the High-commission Court, and commanded to resign his charge immediately, and remove from Kirkcudbright.^a The subject of this Memoir was much admired in early life, for the superior abilities which he possessed. He had a very good classical education and made great proficiency in his studies. And he soon gained such reputation in the learned world, that he was chosen a Professor in the University of Edinburgh, during the establishment of Episcopacy;^b where it is said he received his education.

Afterward, he became Minister of the Gospel at Anwoth, in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, where he was indeed a burning and shining light some years. Whether Mr Rutherford, and other faithful ministers of that period, were ordained by Bishops, or by a Presbytery independent of Bishops? is a question which has been much agitated. Stevenson says; "All that we can assert concerning that matter, after the most inquisitive search, is, that until the beginning of the year 1628, some few preachers were suffered to enter the ministry without conformity, and of this number we suppose Mr Rutherford and Mr Douglas may be reckoned, because they were ordained before the door came to be more closely shut upon honest preachers."^c In what year Mr Rutherford was settled at Anwoth, I cannot say; but there is one of his letters dated at Anwoth, June 6th, 1624, by which it may appear that he was there before that time. He laboured with very great diligence and zeal, in the Lord's vineyard, in that place.

In June, 1630, he was summoned before the High-commission Court; and though that diet was deserted, and the summons passed from for the time, he did not always escape. He was again summoned before the same Court, and accused by the Bishop of Galloway for non-conformity, particularly for preaching against Perth Articles, and writing a book, entitled, Exercitationes apologeticæ pro divina gratia, which did cut up Arminianism, and much vex the Episcopal clergy.^a He appeared before the Court, but declined their jurisdiction, and refused to give the Bishops their titles. Lord Lorn favoured him to the utmost of his power; but the affair was carried against Mr Rutherford, and he was deprived upon the 27th of July, 1636, and discharged to exercise any part of his ministry within Scotland, under pain of rebellion, and ordered to confine himself, within six months, to Aberdeen, and its neighbourhood, during the King's pleasure. He yielded, and went to the place of his confinement.

^a Stevenson, vol. i. p. 151.

^b Edinburgh Christian Instructor, vol. vii. p. 411.

^c Stevenson, vol. i. p. 70.

The confinement in Aberdeen is one of the most interesting circumstances in the life of this eminently pious Christian, and faithful servant of Jesus Christ. And the manner in which he employed his time during that confinement, strongly marks his religious character, and is honourable to religion itself. From Aberdeen he wrote many of his truly excellent and religious letters, which eminently prove that very strong consolations are reserved for the people of God in their persecutions for righteousness' sake; and that they may count those very days of their confinement as the sweetest hours of their life, in a fair prison. We are told, that the confinement of M. de Voltaire in the Bastille was not prejudicial to his talents. He there composed several works, part of which he retained in his memory, and wrote the rest on the walls with a coal, or on the lead of the windows with the point of a pin.^b Nor was Mr Rutherford's confinement in Aberdeen prejudicial to his talents, in the least degree, as clearly appears by his eminently pious letters, which were written there. He employed his talents in doing good; and his several epistles composed in that confinement, have been highly beneficial to many persons, and are still much admired by the pious mind.

Mr Rutherford seemingly enjoyed the particular accomplishment of that exceedingly great and precious promise of Christ, And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. I am with you, to carry you comfortably and honourably through the manifold difficulties which ye may meet with in this present evil world. I am with you, to support you, and to plead your cause: with you in all your services. and in all your sufferings. When ye pass through the deep waters of affliction. and the violent fires of persecution, I shall most certainly be with you: both in the pulpit and in the prison; lo, I am with you.^a

^a Stevenson, vol. i. pp. 148—150.

^b Voltaire's Memoirs, English, Dublin, 1786, p. 26.

The weight of the chains, and the horrors of the inner prison, hindered not Paul and Silas from praying, and singing praises unto God at midnight, Acts xvi. 24. 25. They greatly rejoiced that God had accounted them worthy, conferring upon them the honour and the grace, to suffer for the cause and doctrine of Jesus Christ. See Acts v. 41. Nor could all the severities, cunningly contrived by the most malicious enemies, interrupt that soul-solacing, and sweet spiritual intercourse, which these notable prisoners enjoyed with their God and Saviour. In like manner, Mr. Rutherford's confinement in Aberdeen hindered him not from praying, and singing praises unto the God of his salvation; while he much rejoiced that he was accounted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake, his renowned Lord, and Almighty Saviour. Nor could all the hardships to which he was subjected impair in the least degree, that most sweet spiritual intercourse which he now enjoyed with Heaven. His soul was richly stored with the truly comforting influences of divine grace, and with the sweet religious experiences, which mark the real Christian. The Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort most abundantly comforted him in all his tribulations: For as the sufferings of Christ abounded in him, so his consolation also abounded by Christ; as his admirable letters dated at Aberdeen sufficiently prove.

Mr Rutherford delighted exceedingly, in preaching the glorious gospel of the grace of God unto sinners who were ready to perish ; and, therefore, his silence on the Lord's-day, under his confinement, was peculiarly distressing unto his well-disposed mind. He says, in a letter to Lady Kenmure, dated, Aberdeen, Nov. 22d, 1636 ; " my silence on the Lord's day keeps me from being exalted above measure.—I have wrestled long with this sad silence. I said, what aileth Christ at my service ? And my soul has been at pleading with Christ ; and at yea and nay : but I will yield to him, providing that my suffering may preach more than my tongue did ; for I gave not Christ an inch, but for twice as good again. In a word, I am a fool, and he is God. I will hold my peace hereafter." In the same letter, he says ; " My adversaries have sent me here to be feasted with love-banquets, with my Royal High, High, and Princely King Jesus. O how sweet are the sufferings of Christ, for Christ !—It were a sweet and honourable death, to die for the honour of that Royal and Princely King Jesus. This love is a mystery to the world. I would not have believed that there was so much in Christ as there is. Come and see, maketh Christ to be known in his excellency and glory."

^a See Henry on Mat. xxviii. 20. vol. v.

Mr Rutherford was then the object of oppression and of persecution, and the victim of lawless power ; but he enjoyed the consolations of the Gospel of Christ, in very great abundance, under all his sufferings. He suffered in a good cause ; for the Truth of Christ. He was sufficiently armed ; but his corrupt judges and persecutors were naked, and exposed to the terrible indignation of Almighty God.

" Thrice is he armed who hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked, tho' lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

Mr Rutherford continued in his confinement nearly two years, until he was informed that the Privy-council had received in a declinature against the High-commission, and then he adventured to return home unto Anwoth. This was a joyful event both to himself and to all persons who were concerned. Divine Providence having mercifully restored him to his flock, in the year 1638, he again laboured with great diligence among them. Many persons attended his ministry from all quarters, in that neighbourhood. The people had an ardent desire for the preaching of the glorious gospel of the grace of God, in purity and power, which was rarely to be found; at that time, in that country. But at Anwoth, the Lord God of salvation did make waters to break out in the wilderness, and streams in the desert, to give drink unto his people, his chosen. The solitary place did then rejoice exceedingly, and blossom abundantly as the rose.

Mr Rutherford attended the famous and venerable Assembly, which convened at Glasgow, on the 21st of Nov. 1638. He was one of the Commissioners from the Presbytery of Kirkcudbright to that Assembly. His name is still found standing in the roll of the members, as their minister at Anwoth. He gave them a satisfactory account of all his proceedings respecting his confinement at Aberdeen, and of the causes thereof. He was appointed by them one of the Select Committee for considering the Service-book, the Book of Canons and Ordination, and the High-commission Court, that posterity might well know what great and signal mercy the Lord God of salvation had shewed, in delivering his church from these. And also that the world might know, that the supplications against these books had been just, and that some monuments of their wickedness might be left to the succeeding generations.—Mr Rutherford was also appointed by that famous Assembly to be Professor of divinity, in the New College of St. Andrew's. He opposed his transportation to the utmost of his power; but his objections are said to have turned out rather to be reasons for his compliance with the call which was given to him. Yet in one thing the Assembly were obliged to yield unto him. He said, that the High-commission never did him a worse turn than to stop his mouth from preaching the gospel; that there was a woe to him if he preached not the gospel, and that he knew not who could go between him and that woe. And so he was allowed to be both colleague to the celebrated Mr Robert Blair, who was transported from Air to St. Andrew's, about that time, in preaching the glorious gospel of the grace of God, and also to be teacher of divinity. And, by means of his indefatigable labours, both in teaching in the schools, and preaching in the congregation, St. Andrew's was soon eminently distinguished for piety and learning. Under his care, a number of young men were trained up for the holy ministry, who came to be burning and shining lights, in the Church of Scotland.^a

Mr Rutherford was also eminently distinguished for encouraging the people in the private duties of religion. In the year 1640, when a charge was brought before the General Assembly, at the instance of Mr Henry Guthrie, minister of Stirling, afterward bishop of Dunkeld, against private Society-meetings, which then prevailed in the land, on which much reasoning ensued, the one side allowing that a paper which had been before drawn up by Mr Henderson should be agreed unto respecting the order to be observed in these meetings; but Guthrie and his party opposed that motion. Mr Rutherford, who was before silent, cast in the following syllogism, and required them all to answer it: "What Scripture does warrant, an Assembly may not discharge; but private meetings for exercises of religion, Scripture warrants, Mal. iii. 16. James v. 16. These things could not be done in public meetings." The Earl of Seaforth, and Mr Guthrie, did not relish Mr Rutherford's logical syllogisms; and shewed that they were very averse to be troubled with any more of these. It is said, that Seaforth chided Mr Rutherford; and then Guthrie with his party thought to have carried all their own way, and to obtain a dismissal of all private meetings; but they met with opposition, and could only have an act passed respecting the ordering of family-worship. Mr Rutherford, in a treatise, has defended the lawfulness of these private religious meetings, in a very high degree.^b

He was appointed one of the Committee for managing the negotiations between the Assembly at Edinburgh in ^a Stevenson's Hist. vol ii. pp. 476, 583, 584, 586, 587, 660.

^b Baillie, vol. i. pp. 196—200. Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 887, &c.

1643, and the English Commissioners, when the Solemn League and Covenant was formed.^a

As a divine eminently learned, and of approved orthodoxy, he was, in the year 1643, chosen one of the Commissioners from the Church of Scotland to the Assembly of the Divines at Westminster. He was highly useful in that famous Assembly, and distinguished himself by speaking to good purpose in their debates. Mr Baillie, speaking of the debates respecting the ruling elders, says; "Sundry times, Messrs Henderson, Rutherford, and Gillespie, all three, spoke exceedingly well." And again the same writer says; "Had not God sent Messrs Henderson, Rutherford, and Gillespie, among them, I see not that ever they could agree on any settled government."^b Mr Rutherford and his brethren displayed the most ardent zeal and faithfulness, in that Assembly, especially in settling Church-government. And, Mr Rutherford, in particular, took his full share in the discussions which were carried on there, displaying much learning and knowledge even of the Rabbinical writings, and combating on some occasions the eminently learned Lightfoot with vigour and success.^c During his residence at London, he published his Lex Rex, and some other learned works against the Erastians, Anabaptists, Independents, and other Sectaries, greatly prevailing there at that time. Mr Baillie, speaking of this Assembly, says: "Mr Rutherford's other large book against the Independents is in the press, and will do good."^d And, in a letter to Mr Robert Blair, dated March 26th, 1644, Mr Baillie calls Mr Rutherford "his sweet Colleague." He says further; "Thanks to God, never Colleagues had a greater harmony; for to this hour not the least difference between any of us, either State or Church Commissioners, in any thing.—Mr Samuel, for the great parts God has given him, and special acquaintance with the question in hand, is very necessary a Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 1086.

b Baillie, vol. i. p. 401. vol. ii. p. 11.

c Lightfoot's Remarks, Preface, pp. 12—32.

d Baillie, vol. i. p. 414.

here ; especially because of his book, which is daily enlarging, and it will not come off the press yet, for some time. It is very likely, whenever it comes out, it shall have some short affronting reply ; and judge now if it be not necessary that he should not be here to answer for himself."^a And Mr Flavel says, that Mr Rutherford appeared seasonably and successfully against the Familists in England. His own words are : " Our late Familists in England, of whom Henry Nichols was the chief leader, who decried the written word as a dead letter ; and set up their own fond conceits and fancies under the notion of the Spirit ; against whom, that heavenly and learned man, Mr Samuel Rutherford, seasonably and successfully appeared."^b And Mr Baillie, in a letter for Glasgow, July 14th, 1646, again says : " Mr Rutherford, Mr Gillespie, and your friend also, are all in the press again, for the defence of our Church, and truth of God, against diverse enemies." And in a letter to Mr David Dickson, the same writer says : " Mr Rutherford's large piece against the Antinomians will in a few days come abroad." Oct. 1646. When the principal business of the famous Assembly at Westminster was nearly settled, Mr Rutherford, upon the 24th of Oct. 1647, moved, that it might be recorded in the books, that the Assembly had enjoyed the assistance of the Commissioners of the Church of Scotland, during all the time that they had been debating and perfecting these four things mentioned in the Solemn League : Their composing a Directory for public worship, an Uniform Confession of Faith, a Form of Church-government and Discipline, and a Public Catechism. Upon this, Mr Rutherford and the other Commissioners took their leave of the Assembly, and returned home. Upon that occasion, Mr Herle, who was then Prolocutor, arose, and in the name of the Assembly, thanked the honourable and reverend Commissioners for their assistance.^c a Baillie, vol. i. pp. 450, 451.

b Flavel's Works, Blow at the Root, Cause xiv.

c Stevenson, vol. iii. p. 1181.

Mr Rutherford's reputation was highly raised, by his writings in Latin against the Arminians and Jesuits. And he had a call to be Professor of Divinity and of the Hebrew tongue, in the newly erected University in Harderwyck. Mr Spang, in a letter to his Cousin Mr Baillie, dated, March 19th, 1649, says: "Mr Samuel Rutherford is called to be Professor of divinity and the Hebrew tongue, in the newly erected University in Harderwyck. You might be well advised at home what to do, if our kirk can want such a man, in the great scarceness of such. It is not his English he writes that commendeth him, as his Latin Treatise against the Jesuits and Arminians."^a And the motion was made in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, in 1649, for the transportation of Mr Rutherford to the University of Edinburgh; but Mr Baillie says, that this was thought absurd.^b In that Assembly, Mr Rutherford gave his voice for the popular election of ministers. Mr Baillie, speaking of their great debate, says: "We had greatest debate for an act of election of ministers. Mr David Calderwood was peremptory, that according to the Second Book of Discipline, the election should be given to the Presbytery, with power to the major part of the people to dissent, upon reason to be judged of by the Presbytery. Mr Rutherford and Mr Wood were as peremptory to put the power and voices of election in the body of the people, contradistinct from their eldership; but the most of us were in Mr Gillespie's mind, in his Miscellanies, that the direction was the Presbytery's, the election the Session's, and the consent the people's."^c

Mr Rutherford had an invitation to the Divinity-chair, in the University of Utrecht in Holland; an invitation, we mention it to his honour, which he patriotically declined to accept, only because he could not think of deserting his own country at that very critical period.

During the time of Cromwell's usurpation, he continued to labour with unabated zeal in his Master's service. He faithfully discharged his official duties, and testified against the boundless toleration, and the unscriptural tenets of the Sectaries which then greatly prevailed. When the unhappy difference commenced between those persons who were called the Protesters, and the Public Resolutioners, in 1650, and in 1651, Mr Rutherford joined the Protesters, and gave faithful warning against these Public Resolutions.^a—The Testimony of some ministers, in the shires of Perth and Fife, for the whole of the covenanted work of Reformation, in Scotland, England, &c. was subscribed by Mr Rutherford, Oct. 1658.

^a Baillie, vol. ii. p. 327.

^b Baillie, vol. ii. p. 342.

^c Baillie, vol. ii. p. 339.

King Charles II. upon his restoration, soon declared his displeasure with the Protesters, the opposers of the above mentioned Resolutions; and some of them were the first sufferers in the bloody and horrid persecution which followed. And, Mr Wodrow says, that "in a little time, the whole honest Presbyterian ministers were struck at, and sent to the furnace to unite them."^b

On the 19th of Sept. 1660, a proclamation was published against that famous book, entitled, Lex Rex, which was written by our author, Mr Rutherford, and had been printed at London, in the year 1644, and The Causes of God's Wrath, supposed to be drawn up by Mr James Guthrie. Both the authors, and the printers and the dispersers of those books were accounted rebellious and seditious persons. The books were considered as containing many things injurious to the King, full of treasonable matter, and laying the foundation and seeds of rebellion, and the like. The copies were called in, and ordered to be delivered to Mr Robert Dalglish, his Majesty's Solicitor, in less than a month; with a declaration, that all and every one who, after the 15th of October, shall have any copies of these books, shall not only be esteemed enemies to the King, but also be punished accordingly both in their persons and estates. The books were burned at Edinburgh, by the hand of the hangman, on the 17th of October 1660. It was much easier to burn those books than to answer them.^a It is a vain and senseless attempt, by an arbitrary and unrighteous act, to extinguish the light of truth, and defraud posterity of due information. Genius and piety will thrive under all oppressors. Persecute the author, and you will enhance the value of his work. Tyrants and all persons who have imbibed their senseless and barbarous policy, have found this to be true. By proscribing talents, the oppressors of the Lord's heritage have recorded their own eternal disgrace, and inadvertently given the writer a passport to immortality. Several copies of Lex Rex, which I have seen, are still preserved in good condition, in different parts of Scotland, and in London. And the sentiments which it contains cannot be destroyed by fire, nor by any despot in the universe. It is reported, that when King Charles saw Lex Rex, he said, That it would scarcely ever get an answer. Nor did it ever receive any answer, as far as I know; but men in power most keenly directed all their vengeance against it, by condemning and burning it. This pitiful and spiteful conduct served only to increase the reputation of the book, and was the occasion of its being more generally sought and read. The fire is a conclusive, but not a convincing, argument, says a late writer. The truth is, that fire will certainly destroy any book; but it refutes no book. And burning is not a very good substitute for argument, though too many have applied to it, when they could not answer their opponents by fair reasoning.

^a The reader who wishes to know the rise and nature of these Resolutions, may consult Wodrow's History, Introduction.

^b Wodrow, vol. i. Introduction, p. 5.

The Parliament were to have had an indictment laid before them against Mr Rutherford, if his death had not prevented it. After Lex Rex had been burnt at the cross of Edinburgh and at the gate of the New College of St Andrew's, where he was Professor of divinity; they were pleased, when he was evidently dying, to cite him to appear before them at Edinburgh, to answer unto a charge of high treason. But he was called to appear before a higher tribunal, completely beyond their jurisdiction, where his Judge was his friend.*

^a Wodrow, vol. i. pp. 10, 16.

When he was on his death-bed, he greatly lamented that he was hindered from bearing witness to the glorious work of Reformation since the year 1638, and giving his public testimony against the evil courses of the present time. But we are told that he was enabled to give a large and faithful testimony against the sinful courses of that time, which he subscribed about twelve days before his death, being full of joy and peace in believing.

During the time of his last sickness, he uttered many very savoury speeches, speaking much in commendation of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of his honourable service, especially when the time of his departure was near. Some of his last and dying expressions were: "I shall shine, I shall see Him as He is, and all the fair company with Him, and shall have my large share. It is not easy to be a Christian; but I have obtained the victory through Him who loved me, and Christ is holding forth his arms to embrace me. I have had my fears and faintings, like other sinful men to be carried creditably through; but as sure as ever he spake to me in his word, his Spirit witnessed to my heart, saying, Fear not, he had accepted my suffering, and the out-gate should not be matter of prayer, but of praise." He also said, "Thy word was found, and I did eat it, and it was to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." And a short time before his death, after some fainting, he said, "Now I feel, I believe, I enjoy, I rejoice." And turning to Mr Blair, who was present, he said; "I feed upon manna, I have angels' food, my eyes shall see my Redeemer, I know that He shall stand at the latter day on the earth, and I shall be caught up in the clouds to meet Him in the air." And afterward he said, "I sleep in Christ, and when I awake I shall be satisfied with his likeness. O for arms to embrace Him." And to a person speaking respecting his painfulness in the ministry, he cried out, "I disclaim all, the port I would be in at, is redemption and forgiveness of sins through Christ's blood." We are informed that a gentleman who called on the Rev. J. Newton in London, a short time before his death, mentioned to him how useful he had been by his writings: "I need none of these sweet-meats," said the good old man. Of the same mind was Mr Rutherford, who being full of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, yea, as it were overcome with sensible enjoyment, he breathed out his soul into the hands of his God; and his last words were, Glory, glory dwells in Emmanuel's land. He died in the month of March 1661, the very day before the Act Rescissory was passed in the Parliament.^a

Mr Wodrow gives his character as follows: "That bright shining light, Mr Samuel Rutherford, may very justly come in among the sufferers, during this session of Parliament. Certainly he was a martyr both in his own resolution, and in men's designs and determination. He is so well known to the learned and pious world, that I need say very little of him. Such who knew him best, were in a strait whether to admire him most for his sublime genius in the school, and peculiar exactness in matter of dispute and controversy, or his familiar condescensions in the pulpit, where he was one of the most moving and affectionate preachers in his time, or perhaps in any age of the church.—He seems to have outdone himself as well as every body else, in his admirable, and every way singular, Letters; which though jested upon by profane wits, because of some familiar expressions, yet will be owned by all who have any relish of piety, to contain such sublime flights of devotion, and to be fraughted with such massy thoughts, as loudly speak a soul united to Jesus Christ in the closest embraces, and must needs at once ravish and edify every serious reader."—And Mr Baillie in his Letters, says: "Mr Rutherford has an excellent gift both of preaching and of prayer, and, which helps all to the people's mind, fells all the fourteen bishops, and houghs the ceremonies."^b And

^a Wodrow as above, and Fleming, Fulfil. Scrip. vol. i. p. 359. Ed. 1801.

^b Baillie, vol. i. p. 56.

Dr Cotton Mather, in his Student and Preacher, when mentioning Scottish writers, reckons Mr Rutherford among the champions for the doctrines of Grace. And an eminent late writer, speaking of Mr Rutherford, refers us to his Lex Rex, and to his posthumous work, entitled, Examen Arminianismi, as containing decisive proof of his erudition. Respecting the latter work, that writer adds: "It is spoken of by Nethenus, Voetius, and Essenus, theological Professors, at Utrecht, in terms of the highest commendation. And, indeed, on looking into it, any competent judge must at once be satisfied that it deserves all the praises which those divines have bestowed upon it. The Reviewers expressed a most favourable opinion of the "Refutation of Calvinism," and of course heaped upon its author all the laudatory epithets which reverence for a bishop could suggest. And yet we will venture to affirm, that, in point of knowledge of the subject discussed, fairness of statement, and conclusiveness of reasoning, the bishop of Lincoln's Refutation of Calvinism, is inferior by many degrees, to Mr Rutherford's Examen Arminianismi." With Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, he was very familiar. And he employed these languages as means of procuring useful information to himself, and of communicating it to others. And it has been observed, that "even were he to be judged of by his faculty in making Latin verses, the judgment would be favourable; for we might produce verses of his composition, in which we could challenge the Quarterly Reviewers to detect one false quantity or one unclassical word."^a He seems to have been much above the level of ordinary men. He had a liberal education, and his attainments were proportionate to his advantages. He was eminently distinguished for talent, learning, fervent piety, and indefatigable industry and zeal in his Royal Master's service.

^a Edin. Christ. Instruc. vol. vii. p. 412.

^b Edin. Christ. Instruc.

Mr Rutherford's writings are numerous.—1. Exercitationes Apologeticæ pro Divina Gratia, Contra Jesuitas et Arminianos. Amsterdam, 1636. This is a book of a small size, containing above 400 pages. A vindication of the orthodox doctrine of the divine decrees, of the efficacy of divine grace, and of man's free-will, against the Jesuits and Arminians. It is written in Latin.—2. A Peaceable and Temperate Plea for Paul's Presbytery in Scotland. 4to. pp. 326, London, 1642.—3. The True Right of Presbyteries. 4to. pp. 780, or thereabout, London, 1644.—4. Lex Rex. 4to. London, 1644, and again in 1648. pp. 467.—5. A Sermon preached from Dan. vi. 26, to the House of Commons, at their solemn Fast, Jan. 1644. 4to. pp. 64, London, 1644.—6. A Sermon preached from Luke viii. 22—25, to the House of Lords, in the Abbey Church, Westminster, 25th of June, 1645. 4to. London, 1645. These Sermons were also printed several times with his Trial and Triumph of Faith, and beside, reprinted, Edinburgh, 1709.—7. The Trial and Triumph of Faith, London, 1645; both in 4to. and in a small size; and London, 1652; and Edinburgh, 1721; and Glasgow, 1743. I do not recollect to have seen any more editions of this book, though it may perhaps have passed through more.—8. His Divine Right of Church-government and Excommunication. 4to. London, 1646.—9. Christ Dying, and Drawing Sinners to Himself. 4to. pp. 598, London, 1647; and Edinburgh, 1727; and Glasgow, 1803, in 8vo. pp. 730.—10. A Survey of the Spiritual Antichrist, in two parts. P. I. pp. 354. P. II. pp. 239. 4to. London, 1648.—11. A Free Disputation against Pretended Liberty of Conscience. 4to. pp. 410, London, 1649.—12. Disputatio Scholastica De Divina Providentia. 4to. pp. 620. Edinburgh, 1649. This learned and elaborate book respecting Divine Providence, against Jesuits, Arminians, and Socinians, is written in Latin; and contains the substance of several Lectures delivered to the Students of Divinity in the University of St. Andrew's.—13. The Covenant of Grace Opened. 4to. pp. 368. Edinburgh, 1645.—14. A Survey of the Survey of that Sum of Church Discip- line, by Mr Thomas Hooker; 4to. above 500 pages, London, 1658.—15. Influences of the Life of Grace. 4to. pp. 438. London, 1659.—16. His Religious Letters, which breathe a spirit of ardent and elevated piety, have been often printed. The first edition is said to have been printed, in the year 1664; but I have not seen a copy of that, nor of the 2d edit. I have seen a copy of the 3d edit. printed in the year 1675. An advertisement is prefixed to this edition, intimating that the Author had begun a large Commentary on Isaiah, and completed several chapters, when the troubles of the times and his last sickness seized him; but the manuscript could not be found after his death. The 4th edit. of his Letters was printed in 1692; of which I have seen several copies. The 5th edit. Edinburgh, 1724: and Edinburgh, 1738, said to be the 6th edit. of which I have seen 5 copies. These Letters were printed at Glasgow, 1765. This is said to be the 9th edit. and unto it is added, the Author's Testimony to the Covenanted work of Reformation, and some of his Dying words, with a large Preface and Postscript, which had been left out in some former editions. The 10th and 11th editions, Glasgow, 1783, and 1796: and the 12th edit. Aberdeen, 1802, price 5s. where a considerable number of those extraordinary Letters were first conceived and written. Beside the above-mentioned editions, I have seen copies of an edition, said to be the 8th, Edinburgh, printed by E. & J. Robertson, 1761, in 2 vols. Some of the editions which have been noticed are in 8vo. others in a lesser size, and are well known in this country. Some of those very valuable Letters have been printed separately, for the accommodation of poor persons; as that to his Parishioners, and the one to the Professors of Christ and of his Truth, in Ireland: Glasgow, 1771. We are informed, that Mr Rutherford's Letters were habitually read and greatly valued, by the late Rev. Mr Cecil, an English Episcopal Clergyman, eminently distinguished both for fervent piety and intellectual vigour.^a And the Rev. Robert Traill, some time minister of the Gospel in London, in a letter to his wife, under his banishment, says—"Next unto your Bible, read some good godly books, as worthy Mr Rutherford's Letters, a book which has done much good to some souls, and will do good to more."^b—17. Examen Arminianismi, formerly mentioned was reviewed and published by Nethenus, Professor of Divinity at Utrecht in Holland, and was printed there, in the year 1668. Mr Traill, already mentioned, when he retired to his father in Holland, 1667, was employed some time in assisting Nethenus, in the publication of this book of Mr Rutherford's.—18. A Practical Discourse, on Mat. ix. 27—31, respecting the Power and Prevalence of Faith and Prayer; printed in the year 1713. Small piece. Several Sermons have been printed separately, under Mr Rutherford's name, beside those formerly mentioned; as the Lamb's Marriage, from Rev. xix. 7, &c. Glasgow, 1775.—Heavenly Salutations, with pleasant Conferences between Christ and his people, preached from Cant. ii. 14—17, at Anwoth, before the Communion, in 1680. Glasgow, 1778.—Glad Tidings to the People of God; or, Comfort afforded in views of Death, from Rev. xxi. 4—8, preached in Kirkcudbright, at the Communion, May 10th, 1683. Glasgow, 1779.—The Cruel Watchmen. Glasgow, 1784.—Christ's Love to his Church, Cant. ii. 8—12. Glasgow, 1798. And a small collection of his Sermons, preached at Sacramental Occasions, was first published at Glasgow, 1802; of which I have dispersed some dozens, in the South of Scotland. I have also seen An Exhortation at a Communion, to a Scots Congregation in London, by Mr Rutherford. Second edition, Glasgow, 1804. Price Two-pence. I have seen all his above-mentioned Writings, in different parts of Scotland, except that on Church Discipline, which I saw in London, with a great part of his other Writings.

^a Edin. Christ. Instruc. vol. vii. p. 411.

^b Traill's Works, vol. iv. Glasgow, 1796.

ADONIRAM BYFIELD, A. M.

ONE OF THE SCRIBES TO THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

ADONIRAM BYFIELD received his education in Emanuel College, Cambridge. He came to be particularly known, in the year 1642, by being chosen chaplain to Sir Henry Calmly's regiment, in the army of the Parliament, under the Earl of Essex. In the following year, he was appointed Scribe to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, being according to Wood, "a most zealous Covenanter."

Upon the first publication of the Directory, by order of the Parliament, the profits arising from the sale of it were bestowed upon Messrs Byfield and Roborough, who sold the copy, it is said, for several hundred pounds. In the year 1646, when the "Confession of Faith" was drawn up by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, Messrs Byfield, Thomas Wilson, and Stanley Gower, were appointed as a Committee to collect proofs of the various articles from the Holy Scriptures; all of which, upon the examination of the Assembly, were inserted in the margin. And the year following, when the Confession of Faith was printed, Mr Byfield, by appointment of the House of Commons, delivered a copy to each member of the House with Scripture proofs, signed,

Charles Herle, Prolocutor,

Corn. Burgess, } Assessors,

Herbert Palmer, }

Henry Roborough, } Scribes.*

Adoniram Byfield, }

Mr Byfield was some time Rector of Fulham in the county of Middlesex; and after the wars, he became minister of Collingborn-Ducis, in Wiltshire. Upon his removal to the last mentioned place, he was appointed an assistant to the Commissioners in the county of Wilts for ejecting ignorant and scandalous ministers and school-masters.

Granger says, that Mr Byfield is one of those few writers, who have, by name, been stigmatised by Butler, in his Hudibras. This may be true, and he might be, as indeed he was, an eminently pious and useful Divine. He observes, that Mr Byfield was said to have been a broken apothecary; that he was of special note; and a very active zealot in the busy and boisterous reign of Charles I.; and then adds, that his portrait was published, "with a wind mill on his head, and the Devil blowing the sails." But the best of men and ministers have, in all ages and countries, suffered the vile reproaches of the world lying in wickedness.—All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Such persons have frequently been accounted "the offscouring of all things."

Mr Byfield, with some other persons, assisted Dr Chambers in compiling his "Apology for the Ministers in Wiltshire." London, 1654. He died about the time of the restoration of Charles II. in 1660. Mr Isaac Knight, his successor at Fulham, and Mr Daniel Burgess, his successor at Collingborn, were both ejected Non-conformists in 1662.^b

HENRY ROBOROUGH,

PASTOR OF LEONARD'S, EASTCHEAP, LONDON, AND SCRIBE OF THE ASSEMBLY OF DIVINES AT WESTMINSTER.

HENRY ROBOROUGH was chosen one of the Scribes to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and, about the same time, appointed Pastor of Leonard's, Eastcheap, London, which he held until his death. He was one of the Committee of Divines who were appointed to examine and ordain candidates for the holy ministry, by imposition of hands, in the year 1644. And he united with his brethren, the London ministers, in their declaration against the death of the King.—The profits of printing the Directory being given to him and Mr Byfield, the other Scribe of the Assembly, they are said to have sold the copy-right for several hundred pounds. Mr Roborough died in the year 1650, and was succeeded in his living by Mr Matthew Barker, one of the silenced Non-conformists, in 1662.*

^a Wood's Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

I have only seen of Mr Henry Roborough's Writings, "The Doctrine of Justification Cleared and Vindicated from Arminian, Socinian, and Popish, Errors. Or, an Answer to Mr John Goodwin's Animadversions upon Mr George Walker's Defence of the true sense of Rom. iv. 3, 5. Together with an Examination of the said Mr John Goodwin's Treatise of Justification.—Wherein the Imputation of Faith in a proper sense is denied and confuted: and the Imputation of Christ's Righteousness is affirmed and proved." 4to.

APPENDIX.

WISHING to make the above work as complete as possible, the following additional information, respecting a few of those Eminent Divines who convened in the famous Assembly at Westminster, which has been received since the commencement of the work, is here subjoined.

After the Account of the birth of JOHN ARROWSMITH, who was born at Gateshead, near Newcastle-upon-Tyne, March 29, 1602, vol. i. p. 106, add; he received his education in St John's College, Cambridge, and was a Neal and Brook's Puritans, vol. iii. Calamy's Cont. vol. ii. p. 743. Fuller's Church Hist. B. xi. p. 222.

afterward chosen Fellow of Kathrine-hall, in the same University. He was elected one of the University preachers, was beneficed at Lynn in Norfolk, afterward preacher at St Martin's, Ironmongers-lane, London, and chosen one of the Assembly of Divines. He is said to have constantly attended during the Session; and he united with several of his brethren in drawing up the Assembly's Catechism; and was one of the Divines approved by the Parliament to be consulted in Ecclesiastical matters. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.—He died in Feb. 1659, aged 57 years.

MR ASHE.—In addition to his Writings, I have seen another Sermon of his, entitled, Self-surrender unto God Opened and Applied; in a Sermon from 2 Chron. xxx. 8. before the House of Commons, at Westminster, Fast, Feb. 23, 1647. London, 1647.—It is said, that Mr Ashe has also a Sermon before the Parliament from Gen. xxii. 14. but I have not seen it.—

MR BACKHURST, OR BATHURST.—I have now found that Mr Bathurst was appointed by the Assembly at Westminster, one of the select Committee for the examination and approbation of those ministers who petitioned for sequestered livings. Neal's Puritans, vol. iii. chap. ii.

MR OLIVER BOWLES.—This venerable Divine was Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge, where he most probably received his education. He was a man of great piety, an excellent Scholar, and a celebrated Tutor. The famous Dr Preston was one of his pupils. Upon his removal from the University, he became Rector of Sutton in Bedfordshire, about the beginning of the year 1607.—The Assembly at Westminster, of which he was a very useful member, having made a motion to the Parliament for a fast, previous to their entering upon business, Mr Bowles and Mr Newcomen were appointed to preach before both Houses and the Assembly, and the sermons were ordered to be published. Brook's Puritans, vol. iii.

Mr Bowles's work, entitled, De Pastore Evangelico, was published by his son, and dedicated to the Earl of Manchester. Dr Calamy calls this an excellent book; and adds that it was a book not suffered to creep out in the time of rampant episcopacy, not for any evil in it, but because some men do not care to be put upon too much work. Mr Bowles's son, Edward, who published this book, was one of the ministers in the city of York, and is classed among the ejected ministers. Calamy's Account, vol. ii. p. 779.—vol. i. p. 190.

WILLIAM CARTER.—W. Carter was born in the year 1605.—In 1654, he was appointed one of the Tryers of public preachers.—He was an excellent scholar, an admired preacher, and a man of most exemplary piety.—To his writings, add; he is said to have been author of a sermon entitled, Israel's Peace with God Benjamin's Overthrow; preached before the House of Commons, Fast, 1648. Brook's Purit. vol. iii.

Confession of Faith and other Pieces Composed by the Reverend and Venerable Assembly of Divines at Westminster.

THE Confession of Faith, The Larger and Shorter Catechisms, The Form of Presbyterial Church-government, and of Ordination of Ministers, with The Directory for the Public Worship of God, all agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, with the assistance of the Commissioners from the Church of Scotland, and examined and approved by the General Assembly of that Church, are very valuable works. These excellent Compositions are the fruits of the combined and indefatigable labours, and of the long and learned debates, of the illustrious Divines who convened at Westminster, in the Seventeenth Century. In writing the Lives, particular attention has been paid to the diligence and activity of the respective members in the formation of the above-mentioned Pieces, as far as good information could be obtained. And it is evident, that the Scottish Commissioners signalized themselves, in settling the Presbyterian form of Church-government, as they did also in other performances.

The Confession of Faith, and the other Pieces, composed by this famous Assembly of Divines, have been highly beneficial to the Christian Church, and much commended by some eminent men. These have passed through a great number of editions. I once intended to have given a more particular Account of these Writings; but circumstances will not admit. My daily labour is beyond my ability; and the avocations from this work have been numerous. Of course, it has already been far too long delayed, in bringing it to a termination. Materials have been collected, with a view to give some Account of the editions, which the Westminster Confession of Faith, Catechisms, &c. have passed through; but this part of the work cannot now be performed. Some Account also of Mr Robert Douglas, a celebrated minister in his day, who was appointed by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, as a Commissioner to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, was once intended; but this must be given up in like manner. I have given all the Account, in my power, of the Scottish Commissioners who attended that famous Assembly of Divines, who were Ministers.

CONCLUSION.

The Compiler of these Memoirs has laboured several years, all the time that he could spare from his other work, in endeavouring to give some Account of a considerable number of our illustrious Reformers, the men, whom the infinitely great and glorious Sovereign of the Universe raised up, and marked out to be, under Him, the salt of the earth, and the lights of the world.—The men, who were made the honoured instruments of the conversion of many sinners to God, and of the edification of many saints.—The men, whom Divine Providence employed, in fixing the wavering minds of many persons, among the unsettled multitude, who were tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine; by the slight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—The men, who were taught and enabled, under the smiles and influences of approving Heaven, to display their talents, learning, piety, and zeal, in earnestly contending for the faith, which was once delivered unto the saints.—The men, who entirely devoted themselves to the honourable service of their Lord, in his vineyard, and uniformly sacrificed their own interest to that of their Redeemer's kingdom.—

The men, who supported, with all their energy, the noble cause of divine Truth, under manifold privations and sufferings.—Men who, were not ashamed of Christ, nor of his words, before an adulterous and sinful generation — And the men who did solemnly swear unto Jehovah, and cheerfully subscribe with their hand unto Him, and greatly rejoiced at the oath.

It may be observed here, that after the British Revolution, in 1688, the Westminster Confession of Faith was established, as the standard of orthodoxy, and the Presbyterian form of Church-government was also established, in all it's extent, in Scotland; but alas! the Covenants were over-looked or forgotten.* It is certainly matter of great lamentation, that these solemn deeds, which our noble ancestors very highly esteemed and rejoiced in, should be either over-looked or forgotten. It was one design of this publication, to keep these solemn deeds in remembrance, and excite mankind to turn there attention seriously to the Covenanted work of Reformation. But, alas! that glorious work seems, at this time, to occupy very little of our attention. The time, however, of favouring Zion will come; even the time which Jehovah himself has unalterably fixed. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.

Let us now hear the conclusion of the whole matter:

Fear God, and keep his commandments ; for this is the whole (duty) of man. Let us attend carefully and strictly to both personal and family religion. Let us study to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God. Let us trust in the Lord for ever : for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. Let us endeavour, through divine grace, in our station, to be the salt of the earth, and the lights of the world ; to search the Holy Scriptures, bringing all to their test ;—to try the spirits whether they are of God ;—to hold fast that which is good, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints ; and to follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, that we may be also followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

And for the aid and encouragement of true Covenanters, and with a view to excite a laudable zeal for the glorious work of Reformation, two excellent Speeches which were delivered before subscribing the Covenant, at Margaret's Church, Westminster, on the 25th of Sep. 1648, are here subjoined at the end of this work, and as a conclusion to it. These Speeches were delivered by two eminent Divines, Messrs Nye and Henderson, and now follow.

An Exhortation made to the Honourable House of Commons, and Reverend Divines of the Assembly, by Mr Nye, before he read the Covenant.

A GREAT and solemn work (Honourable and Reverend) this day is put into our hands, let us stir up and awaken our hearts unto it. We deal with God as well as with men, and with God in his greatness and excellency, for by him we swear ; and at the same time we have to do with God and his goodness, who now reacheth out unto us a strong and seasonable arm of assistance. The goodness of God procuring succour and help to a sinful and afflicted people, (such are we) ought to be matter of fear and trembling even to all that hear of it, Jer. xxxiii. 9. We are to exalt and acknowledge him this day, who is fearful in praises, swear by that Name which is Holy and Reverend, enter into a Covenant and League that is never to be forgotten by us nor our posterity, and the fruit I hope of it shall be so great, as both we and they shall have cause to remember it with joy; and such an oath as for matter, persons, and other circumstances, the like hath not been in any age, or oath we read of in sacred or human stories, yet sufficiently warranted in both.

The parties engaging in this League, are three kingdoms, famous for the knowledge, and the acknowledgment of Christ above all the kingdoms in the world; to swear before such a presence, should mould the spirit of man into a great deal of reverence: what then to be engaged, to be incorporated, and that by sacred oath, with such an high and honourable fraternity? An oath is to be esteemed so much the more solemn, by how much greater the persons are that swear each to other: as in heaven when God swears to his Son, on earth, when kings swear each to other; so in this business, where kingdoms swear mutually.

And as the solemnity of an oath is to be measured by the persons swearing, so by the matter also that is to be sworn to. God would not swear to the covenant of works, he intended not to honour it so much, it was not to continue, it was not worthy of an oath of his; but to the covenant of grace, which is the gospel, he swears and repents not of it. God swears for the salvation of men, and of kingdoms: and if kingdoms swear, what subject of an oath becometh them better than the preservation and salvation of kingdoms, by establishing the kingdom of a Saviour amongst them, even our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who is a Mediator and Saviour for nations as well as particular persons?

The end also is great and honourable, as either of the former. Two is better than one, saith he, who best knoweth what is best; and from whom alone every thing hath the goodness it hath. Association is of divine offspring; not only the being of creatures, but the putting of them together: the clustre as well as the grape is the work of God : consort and harmony amongst men, especially amongst saints, is very pleasing unto the Lord ; if when but two or three agree and assent upon any thing on earth, it shall be confirmed in heaven : and for this, because they gather together in his Name, much more when two or three kingdoms shall meet and consent together in his Name, and for his Name, that God may be one, and his Name one amongst them, and his presence amidst them. That prayer of Christ seemeth to proceed from a feeling sense of his own blessedness, Father, that they may be one, as thou in me, &c. Unity amongst his churches and children must needs therefore be very acceptable unto him : for out of the more deep sense, desires are fetcht from within us, the more pleasing will be the answer of them unto us. Churches and kingdoms are near to God, his patience towards them, his compassions over them more than particular persons, sheweth it plainly. But kingdoms willingly engaging themselves for his kingdom, his Christ, his saints, the purity of religion, his worship and government, in all particulars, and in all humility sitting down at his feet to receive the law, and the rule from his mouth ; what a price doth he set upon such ? especially, when (as we this day) sensible of our infirmity, of an unfaithful heart not steady with our God, but apt to start from the cause, if we feel the knife or the fire ; who bind ourselves with cords, as a sacrifice to the horns of the altar : we invoke the name of the great God, that his vows, yea, his curse may be upon us, if we do not this ; yea, though we suffer for so doing, that is, if we endeavour not so far as the Lord shall assist us by his grace, to advance the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ here upon earth, and make Jerusalem once more the praise of the whole world notwithstanding all the contradictions of men.

What is this but the contents and matter of our oath ? what do we covenant ? what do we vow ? is it not the preservation of religion, where it is reformed, and the reformation of religion, where it needs ? is it not the reformation of three kingdoms, and a reformation universal, in doctrine, discipline, and worship, in whatsoever the word shall discover unto us ? To practise, is a fruit of love ; to reform, a fruit of zeal ; but so to reform, will be a token of great prudence and circumspection in each of these churches : and all this to be done according to God's word, the best rule, and according to the best reformed churches, the best interpreters of this rule. If England hath obtained to any greater perfection in so handling the word of righteousness, and truths, that are according to godliness, as to make men more godly, more righteous : and, if in the Churches of Scotland any more light and beauty in matters of order and discipline, by which their Assemblies are more orderly : or, if to any other Church, or person, it hath been given better to have learned Christ in any of his ways, than any of us, we shall humbly bow, and kiss their lips that can speak right words unto us, in this matter, and help us into the nearest uniformity with the word and mind of Christ in this great work of reformation.

Honourable and Reverend Brethren, there cannot be a more direct and effectual way to exhort and persuade the wise, and men of sad and serious spirits (and such are you to whom I am commanded to speak this day) than to let into their understandings the weight, and worth, and great importance of the work, they are persuaded unto. This oath is such, and in the matter and consequence of it, of such concernment, as I can truly say, it is worthy of us, yea, of all these kingdoms, yea, of all the kingdoms of the world ; for it is swearing fealty and allegiance unto Christ, the King of kings ; and a giving up of all these kingdoms which are in his inheritance, to be subdued more to his throne, and ruled more by his sceptre, upon whose shoulders the government is laid, and, in the increase of whose government and peace there shall be no end, Isa. ix. Yea, we find this very thing in the utmost accomplishment of it, to have been the oath of the greatest Angel that ever was, who setting his feet upon two of God's kingdoms, the one upon the sea, the other upon the earth, lifting up his hand to heaven, as you are to do this day, and so swearing, Rev. x. The effect of that oath you shall find to be this, that the kingdoms of the world become the kingdoms of the Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever, Rev. xi. His oath was for the full and final accomplishment, this of yours for a gradual, yet a great performance towards it.

That which the apostles and primitive times did so much and so long pray for, though never long with much quietness enjoyed, that which our fathers in these latter times have fasted, prayed and mourned after, yet attained not ; even the cause which many dear saints now with God, have furthered by extremest sufferings, poverty, imprisonment, banishment, death, even ever since the first dawning of Reformation : that and the very same is the very cause and work that we are come now, through the mercy of Jesus Christ, not only to pray for, but swear too. And surely it can be no other, but the result and answer of such prayers and tears of such sincerity and sufferings, that three kingdoms should be thus born, or rather new born in a day ; that these kingdoms should be wrought about to so great an engagement, than which nothing is higher : for to this end, kings reign, kingdoms stand, and states are upheld.

It is a special grace and favour of God unto you Brethren, Reverend and Honourable, to vouchsafe you the opportunity, and to put into your hearts (as this day) to engage your lives and estates in matters so much concerning him and his glory. And if you should do no more but lay a foundation stone in this great work, and by so doing engage posterity after you to finish it, it were honour enough : but there may yet further use be made of you, who now are to take this oath : you are designated as chief master-builders and choice instruments for the effecting of this settled peace and reformation ; which, if the Lord shall please to finish in your hands, a greater happiness on earth, nor a greater means to augment your glory and crown in heaven, you are not capable of. And this let me further add for your encouragement, of what extensive good and fruit in the success of it, this very oath may prove to be : we know not. God hath set his covenant like the heavens, not only for duration, but like also for extension. The heavens move and roll about, and so communicate their light, and heat, and virtue, to all places and parts of the earth ; so doth the Covenant of God ; so may this gift be given to other covenants that are framed to that pattern. How much this Solemn League and Oath may provoke other Reformed Churches to a further reformation of themselves ; what light and heat it may communicate abroad to other parts of the world, it is only in Him to define to whom is given the utmost ends of the earth for his inheritance, and worketh by his exceeding great power, great things out of as small beginnings.

But however, this I am sure of, it is a way in all probability most likely to enable us to preserve and defend our religion against our common enemies ; and possibly a more sure foundation this day will be laid for ruining popery and prelacy, the chief of them, than as yet we have been led into in any age.

For popery, it hath been a religion ever dexterous in fencing and mounting itself by association and joint strength. All sorts of professors amongst them are cast into fraternities and brother-hoods ; and these orders carefully united by vow one with another and under some more general notion of common dependence. Such states also and kingdoms as they have thus made theirs, they endeavour to improve and secure by strict combinations and leagues each to other, witness of late years that La Sainte ligue, the holy league. It will not be unworthy your consideration, whether, seeing the preservation of popery hath been by leagues and covenant, God may not make a league or covenant to be the destruction of it. Nay, the very rise of popery seemeth to be after such a manner by kings, that is, kingdoms assenting and agreeing perhaps by some joint covenant (the text saith, with one mind, why not then with one mouth) to give their power and strength unto the Beast, and make war against the Lamb, Rev. xvii. where you read the Lamb shall overcome the Beast, and possibly with the same weapons : he is the Lord of lords, and King of kings, he can unite kings and kingdoms, and give them one mind also to destroy the whore, and be her utter ruin. And may not this day's work be a happy beginning of such a blessed expedition ?

Prelacy another common enemy, that we covenant and swear against. What hath been, or what hath the strength of it been, but a subtile combination of clergy-men formed into a policy or body of their own invention, framing themselves into subordination and dependance one upon another; so that the interest of each is improved by all, and a great power by this means acquired to themselves, as by sad experience we have lately found. The joints and members of this body, you know were knit together by the sacred engagement of an oath, the oath of canonical obedience as they called it. You remember also with what cunning industry they endeavoured lately to make this oath and covenant more sure for themselves and their posterity, and intended a more public, solemn and universal engagement, than since popery this cause of theirs was ever maintained or supported by. And questionless, Ireland and Scotland also must at last have been brought into this holy league with England. But blessed be the Lord, and blessed be his good hand the Parliament, that from the indignation of their spirits against so horrid a yoke, have dashed out the very brains of this project, and are now this day present before the Lord to take and give possession of this blessed ordinance, even an oath and covenant as solemn and of as large extent as they intended theirs, uniting these three kingdoms into such a league and happy combination as will doubtless preserve us and our reformation against them, though their iniquity in the mysteries of it should still be working amongst us. Come therefore (I speak in the words of the Prophet) let us join ourselves to the Lord, and one to another, and each to all, in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.

We are now entering upon a work of the greatest moment and concernment to us, and to our posterity after us, that ever was undertaken by any of us, or any of our fore-fathers before us, or neighbouring nations about us; if the Lord shall bless this our beginning, it will be a happy day, and we shall be a happy people. An oath is a duty of the first commandment, and therefore of the highest and noblest order and rank of duties, therefore must come forth attended with choicest graces, especially with these two, humility, and fear.

Fear, not only of God, which ought to be in an eminent measure, Gen. xxxi. 53. Jacob swore by the fear of his father Isaac, as if he coveted to inherit his father's grace, as well as his father's God: but also, fear of an oath it being a dreadful duty, and hath this peculiar, it is established by the oath of God, I have sworn, that unto me every tongue shall swear, Isa. xlv. 23. It is made the very character of a saint, he fears an oath, Eccl. ix. 2.

Humility is another grace requisite. Set your hearts before God in an humble obedient frame; Deut. ix. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and swear by his name. The apostle Paul was sensible of this engagement, even in the very act of this duty, Rom. i. 9. I call God to witness, whom I serve in my spirit; although it be a work of the lips, yet the heart and the whole man must be interested if we expect this worship to be acceptable, Psal. cxix. 108. Accept the free-will offering of my mouth, and teach me thy judgments.

Also it must be done in the greatest simplicity and plainness of spirit, in respect of those with whom we covenant; we call God as a witness betwixt us who searcheth the heart: with him is wisdom and strength, the deceived and deceiver is his, Job xii. 19. He hath wisdom to discover, and strength to punish, if our hearts be not upright to our brethren in this matter. Let us be contented with this, that the words of our covenant be bands, it may not be so much as in the desire of our hearts that they should become snares, no not to the weakest and simplest person that joineth with us. On the whole work, make your address unto God, as Jacob did to his father Isaac, and let there be the like fear and jealousy over your spirits, Gen. xxvii. 12. My father peradventure will feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver, and I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing.

I take liberty with more earnestness to press this care upon you, because I have observed, oaths and covenants have been undertaken by us formerly, and by the command of authority, the fruit whereof, though great, yet not answered our expectation ; the Lord surely hath been displeased with the slighness of our hearts in the work. I beseech you be more watchful, and stir up your hearts with more industry this day than ever before. As it is the last oath you are likely to take in this kind, so is it our last refuge, tabula post naufragium. If this help us not, we are likely to remain to our dying day, an unhappy people ; but if otherwise, you will indeed swear with all your hearts, and seek the Lord with your whole desire, God will be found, and give you rest round about, 2 Chro. xv. 15.

And having sworn, and entered into this solemn engagement to God and man, make conscience to do accordingly, otherwise it is better thou shouldst not vow, Eccl. v. As is said of fasting, it is not the bowing down of the head for a day, so of this solemn swearing ; it is not the lifting up of the hand for a day, but an honest and faithful endeavouring after the contents of this covenant all our days. A truce-breaker is reckoned up amongst the vilest of Christians, 2 Tim. iii. 3. So a covenant-breaker is lifted up amongst the worst of Heathens, Rom. i, 31. But he that sweareth and changeth not though he swear to his hurt, that is, he that will keep his Covenant and Oath, though the contents of it prove not for him, nay possibly against him, yet he will keep it for his oath's sake, such a one shall have his habitation with the Most High, and dwell in his tabernacle, Psal. xv. And as for you, Reverend Brethren, that are Ministers of the gospel, there is yet another obligation will lie upon you : let us look to ourselves, and make provision to walk answerable to this our Covenant for the gospel's sake ; it will reflect a great asperation upon the truth of the gospel ; if we should be false or unconstant in any word or purpose, though in a matter of less consequence, as you can easily, collect from that apology of Paul, 2 Cor. i. 17, 18, how much more in such a case as this is, if we should be found to purpose, nay more, to vow, and covenant, and swear, and all this according unto the flesh, and with us there should be, notwithstanding all these obligations, yea, yea, and nay nay.

That we may all who take the Covenant this day, be constant, immovable, and abound in this work of the Lord, that we may not start aside, or give back, or go on uncomfortably, there is a twofold grace or qualification to be laboured after.

1. We must get courage, spirits that are bold and resolute. It is said in Haggai, that the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people, and they came and did work in the house of the Lord. The work of God's house, reformation-work especially, is a stirring work: read stories, you find not any where, reformation made in any age, either in doctrine or discipline, without great stir and opposition. This was foretold by the same prophet. Chap. ii. ver. 7. the promise is, He will fill his house with glory. But what goeth before, ver. 6. Yet once it is a little while and I will shake the heavens, and the earth and the sea, and the dry land, that is all nations. as in the words following. This place is applied Heb. xii. to the removing Jewish rites, the moveables of God's house. The like you find in the apostles' times, Acts xvii. the truth being preached, some believed, others did not: here beginneth the stir, ver. 6. Those that believed not, took unto themselves certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city in an uproar; and when they had done so, complained of the brethren to the rulers, as men that turn the world upside down, ver. 6. read also Acts xxi. 27, 30, 31. In such a work therefore, men had need be of stout, resolute, and composed spirits, that we may be able to go on in the main, and stir in the midst of such stirs, and not be amazed at any such doings. It may possibly happen, that even amongst yourselves, there will be outcries, Sir, you will undo all, saith one, you will put all into confusion, saith another; if you take this course, saith a third, we can expect nothing but blood: but a wise statesman, like an experienced seaman, knoweth the compass of his vessel, and though it heave, toss, and the passengers cry out about him, yet in the midst of all, he is himself, turneth not aside from his work, but steereth on his course. I beseech you, let it be seriously considered, if you mean to do any such work in the house of God as this is; if you mean to pluck up what many years ago was planted, or to build up what so long ago was pulled down, and to go through with this work, and not be discouraged, you must beg of the Lord this excellent spirit, this resolute stirring spirit, otherwise you will be outspirited, and both you and your cause slighted and dishonoured.

2. On the other hand, we must labour for humility, prudence, gentleness, meekness. A man may be very zealous and resolute, and yet very meek and merciful: Jesus Christ was a Lion and yet a Lamb also; in one place he telleth them, he cometh to send fire on the earth: and in another place, rebuketh his disciples for their fiery spirits, Luke ix. 59. There was the like composition in Moses, and in Paul; and it is of great use, especially in this work of reformation. I have not observed any disputes carried on with more bitterness in men's writings, and with more unsanctified heat of spirit, yea, and by godly men too, than in controversies, about discipline, Church-government, ceremonies, and the like. Surely, to argue about government with such ungoverned passions, to argue for reformation with a spirit so unreformed, is very uncomely. Let us be zealous, as Christ was, to cast out all, to extirpate and root out every plant his heavenly Father hath not planted; and yet let us do it in an orderly way, and with the Spirit of Christ, whose servants we are. The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose, 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. We solemnly engage this day our utmost endeavours for reformation; let us remember this, that too much heat, as well as too much coldness, may harden men in their ways, and hinder reformation.

Brethren, let us come to this blessed work with such a frame of heart, with such a mind for the present, with such resolutions for the time to come; let us not be wanting to the opportunity, God hath put into our hands this day; and then I can promise you, as the prophet, consider this day and upwards, even from this day, that the foundation of the Lord's work is laid, consider it, from this day will I bless you, saith the Lord. Nay, we have received as it were the first fruits of this promise; for as it is said of some men's good works, they are manifest before hand, 1 Tim. v. even so may be said of the good work of this day, it is manifest before hand. God hath as it were before hand testified his acceptance; while we were thinking and purposing this free-will offering, he was protecting and defending our army, causing our enemies, the enemies of this work to flee before us, and gave us a victory, not to be despised. Surely this Oath and Covenant shall be Judah's joy, the joy and comfort of this whole kingdom, yea, of all the three kingdoms.

Jesus Christ King of the saints govern us by his Spirit, strengthen us by his power, undertake for us according as he hath sworn, even the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life, Luke i. Grant unto us also, that when this life is finished, and we gathered to our fathers, there may be a generation out of our loins to stand up in this cause, that his great, and reverend name may be exalted from one generation to another, until he himself shall come, and perfect all with his own wisdom: even so come Lord Jesus, come quickly, Amen.

A Speech delivered by MR ALEXANDER HENDERSON, immediately before the taking of the Covenant by the House of Commons, and Assembly of Divines.

ALTHOUGH the time be far spent, yet am I bold (Honourable, Reverend, and beloved in the Lord) to crave your patience a little. It were both sin and shame to us in this so acceptable a time in this day, which the Lord hath made, to be silent and to say nothing: if we should hold our peace, we could neither be answerable to God, whose cause and work is in hand, nor to this Church and kingdom, unto which we have made so large profession of duty, and owe much more; nor to our native kingdom, so abundant in affection towards you; nor to our own hearts, which exceedingly rejoice to see this day: we have greater reason than the leprous men sitting in a time of great extremity at the gate of Samaria, to say one to another, We do not well, this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace; it is true the Syrians are not yet fled; but our hope is through God, that the work begun this day, being sincerely performed and faithfully pursued, shall put to flight, not only the Syrians and Babylonians, but all other enemies of the Church of God, of the king's honour, and of our liberty and peace.

For it is acceptable to God, and well pleasing in his sight, when his people come willingly in the day of his power (and how shall they not be willing in the day of his power?) to enter into a religious Covenant with him, and amongst themselves whatsoever be the condition of the people of God, whether in sorrow and humiliation before deliverance, or in rejoicing and thanksgiving after deliverance. This is it which the Lord waits for at their hands, which they have been used to perform, and with which he hath been so well pleased, that it hath been the fountain of many deliverances and blessings unto them. When a people beginneth to forget God, he lifteth up his hand against them and smiteth them: and when his people humbled before him, lift up their hands not only in supplication, but in Covenant before the most High God, he is pleased (such is his mercy and wonderful compassion) first, to lift up his hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God, as we have it three times in two verses of the twentieth of Ezekiel: and next he stretcheth out his hand against his enemies and theirs. It is the best work of faith, to join in Covenant with God, the best work of love and Christian communion to join in Covenant with the people of God; the best work of the best zeal, to join in Covenant for reformation, against the enemies of God and religion; the best work of true loyalty, to join in Covenant for the preservation of our king and superiors; and the best proof of natural affection, (and to be without natural affection, is one of the great sins of the Gentiles) to join in Covenant for defence of our native country, liberties, and laws. Such, as from these necessary ends do withdraw, and are not willing to enter into Covenant, have reason to enter into their own hearts, and to look into their own faith, love, zeal, loyalty, and natural affection.

As it is acceptable to God, so have we for it the precedent and example, not only of the people of God of old, of the reformed Churches of Germany, and the Low Countries; but of our own noble and Christian progenitors in the time of the danger of religion, which is expressed in the Covenant itself. The defect was, they went not on thoroughly to enter in a solemn Covenant, an happiness reserved for this time; which had they done, the corruptions and calamities of these days might have been prevented. And if the Lord shall be pleased to move, loose, and enlarge the hearts of his people in His Majesty's dominions to take this Covenant, not in simulation, nor in lukewarmness, as those that are almost persuaded to be Christians, but as becometh the people of God, it shall be the prevention of many evils and miseries, and a mean of many and rich blessings, spiritual and temporal to ourselves, our little ones, and the posterity that shall come after us for many generations.

The near and neighbouring example of the Church and Kingdom of Scotland, is in this case worthy of our best observation: when the Prelates there, were grown by their rents and lordly dignities, by their exorbitant power over all sorts of his Majesty's subjects, ministers and others, by their places in Parliament, Council, College of Justice, Exchequer, and High Commission, to a monstrous dominion and greatness, and like giants, setting their one foot on the neck of the Church, and the other on the neck of the State, were become intolerably insolent, And when the people of God through their oppression in religion, liberties and laws, and what was dearest unto them, were brought so low that they choosed rather to die, than to live in such slavery, or to live in any other place, rather than in their own native country: then did the Lord say, I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. The beginnings were small, and contemptible in the eyes of the presumptuous enemies, such as used to be the beginnings of the greatest works of God; but were so seconded and continually followed by the undeniable evidences of Divine Providence, leading them forward from one step to another, that their mountain became strong in the end. No tongue can tell what motions filled the hearts, what tears were poured forth from the eyes, and what cries came from the mouths of many thousands in that land, when they found an unwanted flame warming their breasts, and perceived the power of God raising them from the dead; and creating for them a new world, wherein should dwell religion and righteousness. When they were destitute both of monies and munition, which next unto the spirit and arms of men, are the sinews of war, the Lord brought them forth out of his hid treasures, which was wonderful in their eyes, and matter of astonishment to their hearts; when they were many times at a pause in their deliberations, and brought to such perplexity, that they knew not what to choose or to do for prosecuting the work of God, only their eyes were towards him; not only the fears and furies, but the plots also and policies of the adversaries, opened the way unto them; their devices were turned upon their own heads, and served for the promoting of the work of God. The purity of their intentions elevated above base and earthly respects, and the constant peace of their hearts in the midst of many dangers, did bear them out against the malicious accusations and aspersions put upon their actions: all which, were sensible impressions of the good Providence of God, and legible characters of his work; which as the Church and Kingdom of England exercised at this time with greater difficulty than theirs, have in part already found; so shall the parallel be perfected to their greater comfort in the faithful pursuing of the work unto the end.

Necessity, which hath in it a kind of sovereignty, and is a law above all laws; and therefore is said to have no law, doth mightily press the Church and Kingdom of Scot- land at this time. It is no small comfort unto them, that they have not been idle and at ease, but have used all good and lawful means of supplications, declarations and remonstrances to His Majesty, for quenching the combustion in this Kingdom: and after all these, that they sent Commissioners to His Majesty, humbly to mediate for a reconciliation and pacification: but the offer of their humble service was rejected from no other reason, but that they had no warrant nor capacity for such a mediation; and that the intermixture of the government of the Church of England, with the civil government of the Kingdom, was such a mystery as could not be understood by them. Although it be true, which was at that time often replied, that the eight demand of the treaty, and the answer given thereunto, concerning the uniformity of religion, was a sufficient ground of capacity; and the proceedings of the Houses of Parliament against Episcopal government, as a stumbling block hindering Reformation, and as a prejudice to the Civil State, was ground enough for their information. The Commissioners having returned from his Majesty without success, and the miseries of Ireland, the distresses of England, and the dangers and pressures of the Kingdom of Scotland. growing to greater extremity; such as were intrusted with the public affairs of the Kingdom, were necessitate, according to the practice of former times, His Majesty having denied a Parliament, to call a Convention of the Estates, for considering of the present affairs, and for providing the best remedies: which immediately upon their meeting, by the special Providence of God, did receive information of diverse treacherous attempts of papists in all the three Kingdoms, as if they had been called for that effect. And by the same Providence, Commissioners were sent from both Houses of Parliament, to consider with the Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland, of such articles and propositions, as might make the conjunction betwixt the two nations, more beneficial and effectual for the securing of religion and liberty against papists and prelates with their adherents. Their consultations with the Commissioners of the General Assembly, did in the end bring forth a Covenant, as the only mean after all other have been essayed, for the deliverance of England and Ireland out of the depths of affliction, preservation of the Church an Kingdom of Scotland from the extremity of misery, and the safety of our native King and his kingdoms, from destruction and desolation. This is the manifold necessity, which nature, religion, loyalty and love hath laid upon them.

Nor is it unknown in this Honourable, Reverend and wise Audience, what errors and heresies in doctrine; what superstition and idolatry in worship. what usurpation and tyranny in government. what cruelty against the souls and bodies of the saints have been set on foot, exercised, and executed for many generations, and now of late by the Roman Church. All which we hope, through the blessing of God upon this work shall be brought to an end. Had the Pope at Rome the knowledge of what is doing this day in England, and were this Covenant written on the plaister of the wall over against him, where he sitteth Belshazzar-like in his sacrilegious pomp, it would make his heart to tremble, his countenance to change, his head and mitre to shake, his joints to loose, and all his cardinals and prelates to be astonished.

When the reformed Churches, which by their letters have been exciting us to Christian communion and sympathy in this time of the danger of religion and distress of the godly, shall hear of this blessed conjunction for uniformity in religion, according to the word of God and the defence thereof, it shall quicken their hearts against the heaviness of oppressing sorrows and fears; and be no other than a beginning of a jubilee and joyful deliverance unto them, from the antichristian yoke and tyranny.

Upon these and the like considerations, we are very confident, that the Church and Kingdom of Scotland will most cheerfully join in this Covenant; at the first motion whereof, their bowels were moved within them. And to give testimony of this our confidence, we who are Commissioners from the General Assembly, although we have no particular and express Commission for that end (not from want of willingness, but of foresight) offer to join our hearts and hands unto it, being assured, that the Lord in his own time will, against all opposition, even against the gates of hell, crown it with a blessing from heaven. The word of God is for it, as you have been now resolved by the consent and testimony of a Reverend Assembly of so many godly, learned, and great Divines. In your own sense and experience, you will find, that although, while you are assaulted or exercised with worldly cares and tears, your thoughts may somewhat trouble and divert you; yet at other times, when upon seeking of God in private or public. as in the evening of a well spent Sabbath or day of fast and humiliation, your disposition is more spiritual and leaving the world behind you; you have found access unto God through Jesus Christ; the bent and inclinations of your hearts will be strongest to go through with this work. It is a good testimony that our designs and ways are agreeable to the will of God, if we affect them most when our hearts are furthest from the world, and our temper is most spiritual and heavenly, and least carnal and earthly. As the word of God, so the prayers of the people of God in all the reformed Churches are for us and on our side. It were more terrible than an army, to hear that there were any fervent supplications to God against us: blasphemies, curses, and horrid imprecations there be, proceeding from another spirit, and that is all. That Divine Providence also which hath maintained this cause, and supported his servants in a marvellous manner unto this day, and which this time past hath kept things in an equal balance and vicissitude of success, will, we trust from this day forth, through the weight of this Covenant, cast the balance and make religion and righteousness to prevail, to the glory of God, the honour of our King, the confusion of our common enemies, and the comfort and safety of the people of God: which may He grant, who is able to do above any thing that we can ask or think.

CONTENTS

OF VOLUME II.

	Page.
PREFACE,	iii
Henry Hall, B. D. of Norwich,	5
Humphrey Hardwick,	6
Robert Harris, D. D.	7
Charles Herle, A. M.	24
Richard Heyrick, A. M. of Manchester,	30
Gasper Hicks, A. M.	32
Thomas Hill, D. D.	34
Thomas Hodges, B. D.	42
Joshua Hoyle, D. D.	45
John Jackson, A. M.	46
John Langley,	49
John Ley, A. M.	50
John Lightfoot, D. D.	55
John De La March,	70
Stephen Marshall, B. D.	72
John Maynard, A. M.	84
William Mewe, B. D.	85
Thomas Micklethwait,	86
Matthew Newcomen, M. A.	87
Philip Nye, M. A.	89
Henry Painter, B. D. of Exeter,	94
Herbert Palmer, B. D.	95
Edward Peale of Compton,	117
Andrew Perne, A. M.	118
John Philips,	120
Benjamin Pickering,	ib.
Samuel De La Place,	122

Contents.

389

	Page.
William Price, B. D.	123
Nicholas Proffet,	124
William Rathband, M. A.	125
William Reyner, B. D.	127
Edward Reynolds, D. D.	128
Arthur Solway,	131
Henry Scudder, B. D.	133
Lazarus Seaman, D. D.	136
Obadiah Sedgwick, B. D.	141
Richard Simpson, B. D.	145
Peter Smith, D. D.	148
William Spurstow, D. D.	ib.
Edmond Staunton, D. D.	152
Peter Sterry, B. D.	174
John Strickland, B. D.	177
Francis Taylor, B. D.	179
Thomas Temple, D. D.	182
Christopher Tesdale, A. M.	183
Thomas Thorowgood, B. D.	185
Anthony Tuckney, D. D.	186
Thomas Valentine, B. D.	190
Richard Vines, A. M.	191
George Walker, B. D.	199
John Wallis, D. D.	205
John Ward,	215
John Whincop, D. D.	ib.
Jeremiah Whitaker, A. M.	216
Henry Wilkinson, B. D.	247
Thomas Wilson, A. M.	251
Francis Woodcock, A. B.	265
Thomas Young, D. D.	267

SCOTTISH COMMISSIONERS.

Robert Baillie, D. D.	270
George Gillespie,	278
Alexander Henderson,	284
Samuel Rutherford,	345

SCRIBES.

	Page.
Adoniram Byfield, A. M. - - - - -	363
Henry Roborough, - - - - -	364

APPENDIX.

Additional Information, - - - - -	365
Confession of Faith, &c. - - - - -	367
Mr Nye's Speech, - - - - -	370
Mr Henderson's Speech, - - - - -	381

S. YOUNG, PRINTER.

1

DEC 31 1934